CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

ATTENTION is continually being called, in our own columns and those of our Indian contemporaries, to the unsatisfactory state of the Indian Ordnance Corps, as regards retirement in the senior ranks. There is a dead block, and though Imperial officers are forced out of the service nolens volens under certain hard-and-fast lines, not only are the Indian officers not liable to similar treatment, but they are not even encouraged to retire if they feel so disposed. This, of course, constitutes a most serious hardship, both on the officers themselves and those who are aspiring to the higher ranks and find their onward progress blocked, and blocked, too, by dissatisfied men, many of whom would gladly quit the service if they could. In order to place the matter intelligently before our readers, we will explain as fully as the space at our disposal will allow the present regulations affecting the officers to whom we refer. This will have the effect of showing, we think, that the Secretary of State for India has it in his power, if he wishes to do so, to remove the difficulty without incurring any great amount of expense; whilst by doing so he would promote the best interests of the service, by satisfying a number of officers who are now dissatisfied public servants. The Warrant of September 6, 1878, runs as follows:—"For the sake of promotion and military efficiency, additional facilities should be offered for the retirement of officers. An officer who shall retire on pension under Indian retiring regulations after the following service, viz.: if a Regimental Colonel five years' service in the rank, if a Regimental Lieutenant-Colonel five years' service in the rank, may be granted in addition to such pension, the extra annuity," &c. This lays upon the Ordnance Corps a double period of compulsory service of five years in each of the two ranks of Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel, which we may term the "double five-year ruling." After the partial clearance in the ranks effected by the temporary and special action of the Warrant up to December 31, 1878, it affected, prospectively, some 338 officers of the Ordnance Corps, from the senior Lieutenant-Colonel downwards. We omit reference to Regimental Colonels whose five-year period of compulsory service has closed, or is now closing, but there is no reason apparently why they should not have come under the concessions of the "single five-year ruling," subsequently granted to the corps generally. The scale of pensions and conditions attending thereon were briefly as follows:—

A Lieut.-Col. of	Pension & extra annuity after 5 years' service in the rank. £	Pension on promotion to Rgtl. Col. forfeits extra annuity for 5 years. £	Generals not admitted to extra annuity.
32 years' service	706 to 726	456	On promotion to General extra annuity was forfeited altogether, and pension remained as in last column.
To 35 years' service	880 to 900	600
To 38 years' service	1,000	750

There was, therefore, a strong pressure upon a Lieutenant-Colonel to retire before promotion to Regimental Colonel under the "double five-year ruling," for on promotion he forfeited extra annuity for five years, and on promotion to General, which might occur within this period, he lost it altogether. The pressure was strongest at 35 years' service, as the loss and risk run were greater than at an earlier period. In 1881, the pressure was to a great extent relieved by the admission of Generals to extra annuity, and permitting them to qualify for it by a "single five-year service ruling" in the two ranks of Colonel and General combined. Further relief was conceded by the Secretary of State for India in 1882 permitting this single period of five years for Generals to be passed in the three ranks of Lieutenant-Colonel, Colonel, and General combined. This liberal concession restored to Regimental Colonels, also, the certainty of extra annuity and maximum pension, either after their five years' service in the rank, or at once, by prior promotion to General. At this period, the scale of pensions was revised as follows:—

A Lieut.-Col. of	Pension & extra annuity after 5 years' service in the rank. £	Pension on promotion to Rgtl. Col. forfeits extra annuity for 5 years. £	Generals admitted to extra annuity.
32 years' service	726 to 746	700	After five years' service as Rgtl.-Col., or on promotion to Gen., regains extra annuity & maximum pension.
To 35 years' service	900 to 920	700
To 38 years' service	1,000	750

The pressure to retire is still further reduced here. It applies, in fact, only to Lieutenant-Colonels of 35 years' service and upwards, and of these, only to those officers whose prospects of promotion to General were at all remote. In the Royal Warrant, March 11, 1882, it is laid down that a Lieutenant-Colonel may attain the rank of Regimental Colonel, "provided he shall have attained the rank of Regimental Lieutenant-Colonel before October 1, 1877." All officers, therefore, who shall have attained, or who shall attain, the rank of Regimental Lieutenant-Colonel subsequent to September 30, 1877, will not pass through the rank of Regimental Colonel, and will not, therefore, have to serve five years for extra annuity in that rank. This extensive concession affected, on April 1, 1882, 251 out of 283 officers of the Ordnance Corps, from Lieutenant-Colonels of October 1, 1877, downwards. It reduced their compulsory service from ten to five years, or from a "double" to a "single" five-year ruling, to qualify for extra annuity. It removed, in fact, almost every vestige of pressure to retire imposed by the "double five-year ruling." It, however, still left untouched 32 Lieutenant-Colonels of rank before October 1, 1877, who would attain the rank of Regimental Colonel, and being liable to the "double five-year ruling," would have to qualify for extra annuity in that rank by five years' service therein, although at this time almost all these officers had already qualified as Lieutenant-Colonels by from five to nine years' service in that rank. It left untouched, also, 23 Regimental Colonels who had also served on the average five years or more in the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, and were undergoing the second period of five years as Regimental Colonels for the extra annuity. The concessions have been so large, so liberal, and so general, that it appears strange why these few officers should have been excluded from the benefits of the "single five-year rule," and in comparison with their brother-officers placed upon a worse footing for retirement, by having to serve a "double five-year service" to qualify for the extra annuity and pension. It is said—but without official grounds, as far as we know—that Lieutenant-Colonels of rank before October 1, 1877, have not been relieved of the "double five-year service" in order that pressure to retire before promotion to Regimental Colonel may still remain on them. This pressure is further said to be beneficial to the service, providing a lateral outlet by forcing the Lieutenant-Colonels to retire, and restraining them from attaining maximum pension. If so, why were not the 23 Regimental Colonels relieved of the "double five-year period"? A relaxation, it seems to us, would have induced retirement and widened the lateral outlet. The number of Lieutenant-Colonels of the Ordnance Corps affected by the "double five-year ruling" on April 1, 1882, was 32 (23 in the Engineers and nine in the Artillery). The admission of Generals to extra annuity under a "single five-year ruling" so far disproves the idea of lateral outlet or preclusion from maximum pension, by placing it at disposal of Regimental Colonels. The exclusion of Generals from extra annuity would far more have tended as pressure to retire at an early period, and to preclude officers from maximum pension. The pension of a Lieutenant-Colonel just under 35 years' service is £746. If promoted to Regimental Colonel before 35 years' service, it drops to £700 until he has served 38 years, when it becomes £750, and after five years' service in the rank of Regimental Colonel—or at once, by prior promotion to General—he regains extra annuity and maximum pension. There is no pressure to retire, therefore, felt by a Lieutenant-Colonel under 35 years' service,—£46 per annum would scarcely induce retirement to any officer in a good position. On the contrary, the "double five-year ruling" would tend, on his promotion, to induce him to remain; while its relaxation, by restoring him to extra annuity, would tend strongly to induce retirement at 35 years' service, or before maximum pension. Many would probably prefer going on £900, to waiting three years more for £1,000. The pension of a Lieutenant-Colonel of thirty-five years' service is £900. On promotion to Regimental Colonel, it drops to £700, until, after 38 years' service, it becomes £700, or after five years in the rank of Regimental Colonel—or at once, by prior promotion to General—he regains extra annuity and maximum pension. Thus it will be seen that the "double five-year ruling" brings pressure to retire only on Lieutenant-Colonels of 35 years' service and upwards, and of these only upon Lieutenant-Colonels whose prospects of promotion to General are remote. So that, out of the 23 Lieutenant-Colonels of Engineers under pressure to retire by the "double five-year ruling" on April 1, 1882, there are only about 12 on whom this pressure really acts, these officers being of 35 years' service, or likely to attain this service before promotion to Regimental Colonel, and also being without speedy prospect of promotion to General. Some of these, in good positions, will doubtless disregard pressure; and on promotion of such to Regimental Colonel, pressure to retire ceases, and pressure to remain their five years, or await promotion to General, sets in. Out of the 23 Lieutenant-Colonels of Engineers, three are now Regimental Colonels, two on promotion (of 35 years' service) disregarded pressure to retire, one under 35 years' service felt none. There are three Lieutenant-Colonels who, in all probability, will become Regimental Colonels before 35 years' service, and, feeling no pressure to retire, will remain. Out of the nine Lieutenant-Colonels of Artillery, five are now Colonels, having disregarded pressure to retire; the remaining four are likely to be promoted before 35 years' service, and will remain. One only out of the 23 Lieutenant-Colonels of Engineers has retired since April 1, 1882, and being under 35 years' service, and not near promotion to Colonel, retired under no pressure. Out of these 23, four are senior Lieutenant-Colonels, whose promotion to General is probably not remote, and on these the pressure to retire acts in a feeble manner, whilst a relaxation would, on promotion to Regimental Colonel, certainly tend to induce retirement. Under the "double five-year ruling," supposed to be beneficial, pressure to remain instead of to retire is being actively exerted on 20 Regimental Colonels; while it will become active as pressure to remain on four Lieutenant-Colonels of Artillery and three of Engineers who feel no pressure to retire at present. Twenty-seven officers there are being pressed to remain, while pressure to retire is acting, and only partially, on 12, and very feebly upon four. The whole action of the "double five-year ruling" is seen to be very complicated, becoming, in fact, rather a pressure to remain than to retire, and so creating a block in military and civil appointments, which the pension system is intended to relieve. It is found to act by no means equally on all. The supposition that it is intended as beneficial to the service seems opposed to the dictates of common-sense. It is certainly entirely and utterly opposed to the liberal spirit of the large concessions made in the pension system since 1878, and which are offered, without reserve, to the Ordnance Corps generally, under a "single five-year ruling." It is difficult to suppose that such liberal pensions and such liberal concessions should be offered on the one hand to nearly the whole of the Ordnance Corps, and on the other hand purposely, as beneficial to the service, withheld from a very few, 32 in number, with a desire of pressing one-third, perhaps, of these unwillingly out of the service, and forcing the remaining two-thirds, and 23 Regimental Colonels besides, to remain longer than they might desire—a dissatisfied few to block promotion. It is far more probable that the case of these Regimental Colonels and Lieutenant-Colonels of rank before October 1, 1877, has been overlooked, and has yet to be brought to the notice of the authorities. The Secretary of State for India extended the five years' service of Generals, spreading it over the three ranks of Lieutenant-Colonel, Colonel, and General, and he can doubtless as easily afford a similar concession to Regimental Colonels, and admit them to extra annuity after five years' service in the two ranks of Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel combined. The pension system will then be without this little blot of suppositious pressure, and no invidious distinctions will remain in the treatment of officers. The liberal objects of the system, now barred to a few, will be thrown open to all, and it will be what it is officially asserted it is intended to be, viz., "On a perfectly satisfactory footing, encouraging, facilitating, and hastening promotion, and enabling every officer, if health permits, to arrange his retirement so as to obtain its benefits." There is no insinuation of illiberality or pressure here; we do not believe either are intended. We would recommend the few officers concerned to bring the subject forward in the proper quarter, and we shall be glad if our review of the matter tends towards the necessary relief.

THE Staff of the Excellent are succeeding, intentionally or unintentionally we wot not, in making our "great Naval gunnery establishment" most unpopular throughout the service. The Admiralty originally established the "gunnery short course" to enable officers on half-pay to keep themselves posted in modern Naval gunnery, and not to procure officers under false pretences to do the drudgery work of the ship. The Staff officers of the Excellent, however, have viewed the matter in a different light, and have succeeded in shifting all mere routine work from their own shoulders on to those of the Lieutenants of the Fleet who are appointed, on their own application, to the Excellent, to undergo a course of study in Naval gunnery. We strongly urge the Admiralty to look into this matter, or the time will assuredly shortly come when they will receive no more applications from Lieutenants to be allowed to undergo the "short course" on board the Excellent. These officers are made so thoroughly uncomfortable on board that gunnery-ship, that her ill-fame has rapidly spread throughout the service, and, while officers who have once undergone the "short course" assert that nothing would induce them to go through it again, many others have made up their minds never to subject themselves to the ordeal. The sole result of such a state of things is a great loss of efficiency to the service, in that very branch in which all should be thoroughly proficient. Unfortunately, the Gunnery "Staff Officer" looks upon himself as a superior being to the ordinary Lieutenant, and he has succeeded in arranging the routine of the Excellent to his own advantage. The "ship's orders" have been drawn up in utter defiance of the Queen's Regulations, and this, we regret to state, has met with the approval of the Admiralty. For example, officers appointed to the Excellent to undergo the "short course" are so appointed as "additional, for special or particular service;" and by the Instructions, "are never to assume the charge or command of the ships in which they are so borne, nor any other charge or command, except that which may appertain to the special or particular service for which they are so borne." But the "ship's orders" are framed in direct contravention of this article. The second duty Lieutenant of the day is invariably a "Short-course" officer. He has to do midshipman's work, such as mustering the division, going the rounds by night, inspecting the tenders on Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, and he must remain on board from Friday to Monday, during which time there are no drills on board, and consequently no opportunity for him to study the science of gunnery, or the special duty for which he was appointed to the Excellent. Cases have arisen in which the "Short-course" officer has actually been senior in his rank to the Staff officer left on board as commanding officer, and differences have naturally arisen, the senior objecting to be commanded by his junior, who at once has been able to shelter himself under Order 2 of the "Ship's Orders," which directs that "officers must consider that whatever their seniority or standing in the service may be, whilst in the Excellent they are students." Then why compel them to do other than students' work? Why place them in the false position of having to obey a junior officer? In no service in the world would such a departure from recognised military law be tolerated, as it is only calculated to leave disorganisation, demoralisation, and ruin in its wake.

JUSTICE in the Navy, administered by Courts-martial, is noted for uncertainty. The Commander of the Lively was severely reprimanded for the loss of his ship, which took place while he was below discharging the duties imposed upon him in entertaining the members of a Royal Commission, and when the ship was in charge of the special Pilot sent on board by the Admiralty to navigate the ship. The Captain of the Eclipse was acquitted of all blame when his ship sank a merchant vessel upon the high seas, on the ground that he was in his cabin at the time of the collision. Both sentences were delivered within the same year. Cases innumerable could be adduced to prove that the agitation for a reform of our court-martial procedure was not started without just cause. And, apparently, the Admiralty are of this opinion, for they have recently issued a lengthy Circular dealing with the question of Courts-martial, and, under the authority of her Majesty's Order in Council of December 16, 1882, now direct certain articles to be substituted for Articles 581 to 620, inclusive, of the Queen's Regulations. That is to say, the whole of chapter 20, dealing with Courts-martial, has been revised. But, so far as we can see, up to the time of the issue of the Circular, when a court-martial sentenced a prisoner to corporal punishment, it was incumbent on "the Commander-in-Chief, or other officer whose duty it may be to cause the sentence to be carried into effect, to direct punishment to be inflicted forthwith, or as soon as the convenience of the service will admit." Art. 613, the revised Regulations, directs that "when a court-martial awards corporal punishment, it is not to be carried out without the previous approval of the Admiralty." When sentence of death is passed, however, the criminal may be executed forthwith.

The Earl of Northbrook returned to the Admiralty on Tuesday from Chatham, and left the next day for Balmoral to act as Minister-in-attendance on her Majesty.

The Lords of the Admiralty inspected Chatham Yard on Monday and Tuesday last, concluding their inspection on the evening of the latter day, when they returned to Whitehall.

Lieutenant F. E. Watson, R.M.L.I., serving on board the Repulse, stationed at Hull, was recently at Sheerness with his ship. Lieutenant Watson went up to Chatham on leave, and was pressed to stay to dinner by his brother-officers in barracks, it being guest-night. After he had retired to his couch, the youngsters proceeded to "draw" their guest, who was left standing all night in scant garments, his clothes having been carried away. The matter was reported in the morning, when Lieutenants Wilson and Lalor were placed under arrest. On the following Monday, a Court of Inquiry was ordered to assemble, to investigate the conduct of Lieutenants Wilson and Lalor, who were reported to the Deputy Adjutant-General of Marines by that day's post. The report of the Court of Inquiry led the Admiralty to order charges to be framed, with a view of bringing Lieutenants Wilson and Lalor to trial before a court-martial; but when the charges were framed, they appeared so frivolous that their Lordships decided not to try the officers, and ordered Lieutenants Wilson and Lalor to be reprimanded, in the presence of the officers of the Division. Their Lordships' letter was accordingly read to the officers concerned, in the presence of the officers of the corps, in the mess-room.

Our Naval readers will be glad to hear that cricket is not forgotten in the present day by the cadets of the Britannia, and that the results of the last season's matches would not discredit even old veterans of our national game. We append a summary of what our future executive officers have done during the current year, and are sure that it will be read with satisfaction:—Naval officers, Plymouth, 1; Royal Marines, 2; 32nd Regiment, 1; 74th Regiment, 2; 82nd Regiment, 1; Lieutenant Heneage's team, 1; Lieutenant Elliott's team, 1; Newton College, 2; Torquay, 4; Teignbridge, 2; Mr. Denison's team, 1; South Devon, 1; Apsley House, 1; total number of matches, 20. Won, 12; lost, 2; drawn, 6.

The Russian Admiralty has applied for a special credit of 6,000 roubles, to enable it to comply with the request of General Tchernayeff to survey the Mertvi Kultuk Bay, opposite the mouth of the Volga, in order to select a channel for a port that is to be built there in connection with the new route recently opened up across the Ust Urt to Khiva. By this route Khiva will be brought within three weeks' communication of Moscow, instead of the journey viâ the old roads of Fort Alexandrovsky and Krasnovodsk, occupying two or three months, as hitherto the case.

Captain A. Buller, C.B., late of the Cambridge, and borne additional for the Royal Adelaide, having completed the gun trials on board the Agamemnon, has been placed on half-pay, which we trust will not be of long continuance.

An important change has been made in the defence of the coasts of the Black Sea, in so far as it has been decided to abandon Nicolaieff as a war harbour and to replace it by Otchakoff. This at least appears from the order issued, which dissolves the artillery administration at Nicolaieff, and transfers it to Otchakoff. Two fortress artillery battalions are to be garrisoned in the latter place, which points to an extension of its fortifications. The position of Otchakoff harbour is such that the entry of hostile ships into the harbour of Nicolaieff, which is already well protected by nature, could be entirely prevented if the former, as seems to be the intention, is provided with guns of long range. A tongue of land opposite the harbour of Otchakoff reaching far out into the sea cuts off the latter to such an extent as to form a harbour which could give shelter to a very large fleet. Otchakoff may also be more easily reached from Odessa than Nicolaieff.

Officers who, on arriving at the rank of Navigating Lieutenant, elected to be placed on the Executive List, and those who were transferred thereto while holding that of Navigating Sub-Lieutenant, do not appear to be required to stick to navigating duties. One is qualifying for Torpedo Lieutenant, and others are holding appointments in which only the ordinary duties of a Lieutenant are required of them.

Major Haseltine, R.M.L.I., in command of the Liverpool Recruiting Depôt, has, we understand, been ordered to close his books and rejoin his head-quarters, consequent on his not having availed himself of the opportunity to pass for the rank of Major. It is also rumoured that the Admiralty have selected Major Fuller, the junior Major on the 16s. 3d. a day list, to succeed Major Haseltine in the appointment at Liverpool, which, until it was conferred on Major Haseltine, has always been regarded in the corps as belonging by right to the senior Major available. Major Fuller, on the other hand, was still a Captain when Major Haseltine vacated the Liverpool appointment, by failing to present himself for examination, and he has for some time been Instructor of Gymnastics at the depôt, which appointment he now vacates on promotion. To thus move an officer straight from one good appointment to another is hardly fair to the large number of officers of the corps still on the waiting list, and especially when all the officers thus set aside are senior to the lucky protégé of the authorities. When the Marine battalion was ordered to Zululand, certain officers were found unfit for active service, and were at once retired. Captain Fuller was excused proceeding on active service on the plea of "varicose veins," but was nevertheless appointed to the gymnasium at the depôt, when all his brother-officers confidently expected he also would be forced to retire. To now appoint this officer to the very best billet in the gift of the Admiralty will surely before long bring about manifestations of ill-feeling in the corps, and we strongly urge the Admiralty to revert to the old seniority system, so long successfully carried out in the Marines.

Mr. J. K. Laughton, M.A., R.N., will give a course of nine lectures on Naval history from 11.50 to 12.50 on Wednesdays, beginning on Wednesday, October 10. Officers of all ranks in any department of the public service are permitted to attend these lectures. Officers who attend are requested to sign their names, with rank appended, at the entrance of the lecture-room. They should leave for Greenwich by the train which leaves Charing Cross at 11 o'clock.

Captain A. H. Des Barres, of the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines, has been appointed Instructor of Gymnasium at the Depôt, Walmer, vice Major Fuller, who vacates the post on obtaining the higher rate of pay as Major.

W. D. Niven, Esq., F.R.S., has assumed the post of Director of Studies at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, vacated by Dr. Hirst, F.R.S.

The statement transmitted from Vienna a few days ago, that 148 Russian naval officers had been arrested at St. Petersburg for complicity in a Nihilist plot, and incarcerated in the fortress of Peter and Paul, must be accepted with a considerable amount of salt, although it is an undoubted fact that revolutionary views are very prevalent in the Russian service just now. A correspondent, who has recently arrived from St. Petersburg, tells us that at a dinner given by a number of naval officers a short time ago, he heard an Admiral propose the significant toast, "May something else soon be empty besides our glasses," which, amidst cries of "Good speed reform!" "Here's to a change of régime!" was drunk with enthusiasm.

The Undine and the Harrier, sailing schooners, have been transferred from the Mozambique Channel to the Australian station.

Sub-Lieutenant C. L. Napier, of the Alexandra, has obtained first-class certificates in all subjects when passing the examination for the rank of Lieutenant.

The Mediterranean Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Lord John Hay, arrived at Salonica on September 29, and were to leave on October 4 for Chios, Smyrna, and Cyprus, reaching the latter in November.

The Channel Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral Sir W. Dowell, left Plymouth on October 4, and passed the Lizard at 2 p.m. for Bantry Bay, and will return to Portland in about a fortnight.

Lieutenant Lionel de Sausmarez, late of the Sultan, and who recently retired with the rank of Commander, has accepted the post of Director of the Army and Navy Co-operative Society.

The War Department have instructed Mr. White, of Cowes, to build a double-rudder torpedo boat, about 100 ft. in length, for use of the Royal Engineer Submarine Miners.

One of the chief amongst the many grievances of Paymasters is that their offices are periodically inspected by civilians from the War Office, instead of by Chief Paymasters appointed for that purpose, as laid down in Art. 371, Royal Warrant, 1882. Knowing this, we were much pleased, a short time since, to hear that the Chief Paymaster of the Home District had been ordered to inspect some of the offices in his district. We have, however, been since assured, on what we believe to be good authority, that there is no present intention of handing over these duties to Chief Paymasters, as War-Office clerks would, by so doing, give up their pleasant trips out of town, as well as a good daily allowance. In the light of economy, besides justice, we think that the Secretary of State for War should look into this, and thus redress one of the grievances under which this Department suffers, and as regards competency, we doubt whether the public would be losers.

In a smart and smarting article on "the Militant Missionary," Mr. Shaw, the World talks of the arrest of Colonel Keith Fraser and Captain Hozier at Etampes, and of their being "treated with indignity by the Landwehr Colonel, whose affection for the spoons Colonel Brackenbury so amusingly described." Our contemporary is "slightly mixed." Colonel Brackenbury made a mistake, and thought the non-commissioned officer whom he saw taking a spoon was an officer, and when he found out his mistake he acknowledged it. The Landwehr Colonel had nothing to do with the spoon transaction, and beyond their arrest and forced return under escort to Versailles, where they were confined for a couple of hours, there was no "indignity" offered to the officers named by the World. They were at the time of their arrest in the society of English gentlemen who were accused of an undue partiality for a Frenchman's clock, and they were denounced to the Prussian authorities accordingly. Nor were Colonel Keith Fraser and Captain Hozier at the time "officers on service," as our contemporary states they were,—i.e., in the actual discharge of military duty for the Queen.

A correspondent writes from Aldershot:—"As winter is approaching, the condition of the huts at Aldershot is worthy of attention. The accommodation for the troops in the North and South Camps is without doubt the worst in the kingdom. Tolerable as these huts may be during the summer months, they are wretched dwellings in winter, especially the married quarters. In the North Camp the work of reconstruction drags slowly along, owing to the ridiculously small sums which have been granted for this purpose. A sum of £10,000 only was voted for the year 1883-84. It is stated in the annual Estimates that 'the wooden huts will be replaced by others of permanent materials, as renewal becomes necessary.' The renewal of the whole of the huts has been plainly necessary for some time past. They were condemned by the highest Engineer authority years ago. It would seem by what is now going on in the South Camp that replacing of the huts by permanent buildings is not contemplated in this Camp for years to come. Here a large sum is being expended at the present time on the quarters of Warrant officers, to make them as comfortable as possible."

In last week's paper, there appeared a statement from our Berlin correspondent that "it was reported in German Military circles another Krupp gun had been added to the list of guns burst during the present year," and that it was "a 15-cwt. gun of the latest design." The writer stated, moreover, that it was "the third which was known to have burst within the last ten months, the others being a 28-cwt. at Fort Heppens, near Wilhelmshaven, and a 35-cwt. at Cronstadt." We are assured that the whole of that statement is without the slightest foundation, by Mr. Krupp's firm in London; and we have, therefore, to express our great regret that we gave publicity to our correspondent's assertions, as we are assured on authority entitled to confidence that they are entirely without justification, as far as Mr. Krupp's guns are concerned, and we have, therefore, to tender to the firm our apology for the statement, and to withdraw it altogether.

The coroner's inquest on the remains of the two men who were unfortunately killed by the accidental ignition of a large number of rockets at Woolwich lately has not thrown much light on that accident. Perhaps an official inquiry may yet take place with the view of ascertaining the cause and preventing the recurrence of such a fatality. Some of those subordinates with the nonsensical titles we mentioned last week—titles which fail to convey to the uninitiated the faintest notion of the duties of those who bear them—may possibly be able to give some useful information. The Serjeant-Major Artificer, Corps of Ordnance Artificers, may, for all we know, be intimately connected with the making of any or all kinds of engines of war; the Serjeant-Major Instructor, Manufacturing Department, may have unlimited powers of teaching; the Quartermaster-Serjeant, Foreman of Proof, may be able to resolve all doubts into mathematical certainties; and the Serjeant-Major, Educational Establishment, may be qualified to translate into clear and simple language even the details of General Orders and Warrants. There is one more mysterious office-bearer whose title urgently calls for comment, the Quartermaster-Serjeant Instructor of Gymnasia. An instructor of recruits is undoubtedly one who teaches recruits; but the Instructor of Gymnasia cannot teach anything to a room fitted up with gymnastic apparatus! If he were called Serjeant Instructor in Gymnastics, omitting the prefix, which only misleads, his title would be intelligible, and would indicate his duties correctly. But perhaps clearness and accuracy are not wanted in General Orders, for they are generally wanting!

We deplore the outrage to the King of Spain, but we do not think the Kölnische Zeitung (Gazette de Cologne) is to be praised for good-taste in its address to France before the incidents of Paris. "Do you want Strasburg? Do you want Metz? Take them! You know where they are, and Kable and Anthoine can show you the way as spies. We will send them to you across the frontier. Would you like to overthrow the National Monument? You know where it stands! With your insults, you show you are only wretched varlets, who are independent because the rod is not on your backs."

The Lucknow Banquet is a very legitimate celebration of a fine military performance, which delivered a gallant garrison from great straits and danger, and gave confidence and hope to those who were engaged in the arduous task of recovering the Indian Empire. Beati viventes! Napier of Magdala, then unambitious, almost unhopeful, Colonel of Indian Engineers, now Field-Marshal of England, was a fitting president of the dinner on the anniversary, which was celebrated at Eberle's Army and Navy Hotel (not that M. Eberle has an Army and Navy of his own, but that he keeps a good hotel for Army and Navy, and all the world besides), and there were assembled many of the band who fought their desperate way from the Dilkoosha and the Goomtee into the beleaguered Residency, six-and-twenty years ago. "Jack Olpherts," who has been fretting his life out for more work, Willis, who has had his share lately at Tel-el-Kebir, Spurgin, Crommelin, Palliser, Havelock-Allan (lately engaged in irregular warfare on his own account in Egypt), Dodgson, now all Generals; gallant Jee (of the Jees), and such men as Delafosse of Cawnpore, Battine, Neville, Shute, Macbean, Gordon, Blake, Maitland, &c., all meeting once more in the flesh, must have felt thankful and happy in the remembrance of their common toils and services, and in the gratitude of the country.

Promotion by fits and starts appears to be the new motto of the Horse Guards. We used frequently to feel it our duty to draw attention to the habitual delay which took place in filling up vacancies in all ranks of the Army. Some months ago, we noticed, with the greatest surprise, that for three weeks in succession the vacancies of one Gazette were filled up in that of the following week. But a relapse soon took place, and the same phenomenon has only recurred once or twice since, and just lately things have quite fallen back into the old groove. This might possibly be partially accounted for by the absence of the Commander-in-Chief from his post at Head-quarters, but that fact will hardly explain why Lieutenant-Colonelcies have been vacant in the York and Lancaster Regiment for two months, in the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders for over three months, and in the Seaforth Highlanders for over six months. No doubt there is a very good reason for the delay, but the ordinary mind cannot be expected to fathom the wondrous ways of officialism.

The affair of the King of Spain's reception in Paris has given rise to articles of extreme violence in the French Press. M. Paul de Cassagnac, the Deputy, editor of the Pays, and well-known duellist, has gone so far in his wrath as to declare that he would sooner be a subject of the Emperor William than a French citizen under M. Jules Grévy. In the Avenir Militaire, one finds something more calm. That paper would smooth down the ruffled feathers of French chauvinisme, by explaining customs which, it says, are unknown in France, which appear singular, and which, nevertheless, exist. "They explain," adds the writer, "why the distinction conferred by the Emperor William on the young King of Spain has none of the character or consequences which certain journals have rashly attached to it. This distinction does not confer any authority. Alfonso XII. might give as many orders as he likes, and not a single soldier of the 15th Uhlans would leave barracks without the authorisation of his immediate chief." The Avenir observes, however, that the choice of the regiment given to the King of Spain was unfortunate, and it thinks that, under similar circumstances, the French Government would have acted with more good-taste than the German Government did in the present instance. The Avenir gives a list of the Emperors, Empresses, Kings, Queens, Princes, &c., who are Colonels of German regiments, and, altogether, takes a very calm and proper view of an episode which ought never to have occurred, and which has created a great deal of bad-blood. There are rumours that this affair is likely to lead, if not to a Ministerial crisis in France, to the retirement of War Minister Thibaudin, who is such an ultra-Liberal that he kept aloof from the King of Spain, and at one moment refused to order him an escort.

It is probable that the Commander-in-Chief will make his autumn inspection of the troops at Aldershot during the ensuing week, when a sorry contrast will be presented to his Royal Highness between the weak regiments of the Aldershot Division—mere cadres—and the solid German battalions lately seen by him. At the present time, with every available man on parade, the Division could not muster 6,000 of all ranks.

It has always been held that the British soldier, to fight well, must be well fed, and for many centuries this has been a matter for joking with our neighbours, the French. We find in Shakespeare, the Duc d'Alençon laughing at the Englishmen who defeated him the next day, and saying that,—

> "They want their porridge, and their fat bull beeves:
> Either they must be dieted like mules,
> And have their provender tied to their mouths,
> Or piteous they will look, like drowned mice."

But what do we find now? L'Armée Française says that, in looking over the history of modern wars, it is easy to show that a defect in the commissariat has often compromised an action, and produced a disaster where a victory was counted upon; that it is the duty of a General to spare the health and strength of his men by comforting them with good rations, regularly served out, and putting "heart into their stomachs." It was hunger, says the writer, which brought about the capitulation of Metz. What was the evidence given by Marshal Canrobert at the court-martial of the Trianon, where Bazaine was tried and condemned?—"On the morning of August 16, while passing in front of the troops, I remarked something strange in their attitude, and I questioned them. They told me that they had not eaten anything. In fact, these soldiers had fought all day at St. Privat without eating or drinking." General Martin des Pallières, in his work on the war of 1870, says:—"Since our African wars, the alimentation of the soldier in the field has depended upon the pot-au-feu, or boiled beef, that is to say, on food which requires five or six hours' cooking in the morning, and the same time in the evening." And, adds the General, "We have the pretension of having an armée mobile." The fact is that the French Army cannot fight without its beef, and that the present system of preparing it is open to improvement.

A correspondent writes:—"Why are non-commissioned officers who have served their 21 years, and gained a pension, allowed to remain in the service, debarring those who are eligible to take their place from further promotion? Let there be an order to remove all warrant and non-commissioned officers after they have gained the full pension in case of warrant officers, and in the case of non-commissioned officers after they have completed 21 years service. This will give a fair chance to 'the coming race.'"

COURTS-MARTIAL.

The Admiralty have directed that the annexed Articles are, under the authority of her Majesty's Order in Council of Dec. 16, 1882, to be substituted between Articles 581 to 620, both inclusive, of the Queen's Regulations, 1879. The alterations made are as follows. Articles not altered, or wherein the virtual alteration is immaterial, are omitted:—

Art. 581.—Authority to hold Courts-martial. Add, "And according to the rules of procedure, and the forms, established, from time to time, under the authority of the said Act or Acts."

Art. 582. Mode in which Charges are to be preferred. Add to (b):—"Any number of prisoners may be tried together for an offence charged to have been committed by them collectively, unless it is found that one or more of them are required as witnesses for the prosecution or defence, in which case separate charges must be framed and separate trials held, except as provided in section 92 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1866." Add, "(e) List of witnesses for the prosecution." Add, "4. When circumstantial letter alludes to previous conduct of prisoner.—When, however, the circumstantial letter (a) refers in any way to the previous character or conduct of the prisoner, or contains allusions to his prejudice, and there is no time to send it back for correction, the letter is not to be sent with the charges to the president, but is to be put under cover to the Judge-Advocate by the officer ordering the trial, who is to mark the passages which the Judge-Advocate is to omit when reading it in court; but whenever practicable, any letter containing such allusions is to be returned for correction, in accordance with the foregoing instructions. When any portions of the letter are omitted, only such portions as have been read to the court are to be laid before it until after the prisoner has pleaded guilty or been convicted. It is to be distinctly understood that no portion of the circumstantial letter is to be accepted as evidence, except in the case of the prisoner pleading guilty." Add, "5. Captain, if likely to sit on court-martial, not to investigate complaint.—It is undesirable that, in cases where the captain of a ship may be required to sit as a member of a court-martial, he should himself investigate a complaint which, on the face of it, is likely to form the subject of a charge for trial. The investigation in such a case should be undertaken by the executive officer, who is to sign the circumstantial letter, and the letter enclosing the charges, addressing both to the captain. The captain will then, in the exercise of his discretion, forward them to his superior. On stations where, on account of the small number of ships available, there is difficulty in obtaining the officers necessary to form a court, captains should be particularly careful in this matter, because an objection on the part of the prisoner to be tried, based on the fact that one of the members of the court had already investigated his case and expressed an opinion upon it, might be admitted by the court, and no other officer of the necessary rank being available, the court-martial could not be held until another opportunity presented itself."

Art. 584.—Responsibility of President. Add, "The president is responsible for the trial being conducted in proper order and in accordance with the Naval Discipline Act, or Acts, and the rules laid down by the Admiralty."

Art. 586. Members.—Add, "Any officer who, on promotion, retains his command or appointment in the lower rank under Arts. 138 to 141 of the Queen's Regulations, 1879, shall, if not reappointed or specially ordered to assume the higher rank by the Admiralty, sit at courts-martial in the rank from which he was promoted, but senior of that rank; if, however, two or more officers promoted to the same rank and similarly circumstanced are present, they shall sit in the order in which they stood in the official list in their lower rank."

Art. 588. Prisoner to be furnished with copy of charge, &c.—The president will take care that before trial the accused is furnished with a copy of the charge or charges, and of the whole of the circumstantial letter, Art. 582 (a), together with a list of witnesses for the prosecution; he should receive the copy of the charge or charges at least 24 hours before trial, except when in a case of mutiny the trial is to be immediate, or in such other pressing circumstances as might render delay very inconvenient to the public service. Add, "2. And to have proper opportunity of preparing defence.—A prisoner for whose trial a court-martial has been applied for, or ordered to assemble, shall be afforded proper opportunity of preparing his defence, and shall not be debarred from free communication with his witnesses and with any friend or legal adviser whom he may wish to consult. 3. Prisoner may have a person to assist him on trial.—A prisoner may have a person to assist him during the trial, whether an officer, a legal adviser, or any other person approved by the court. A person so assisting him may advise him on all points, and may read the prisoner's defence, or statement in mitigation of punishment, but he is not to address the court. 4. Prisoner's defence.—The court should allow considerable latitude to the prisoner in making his defence. It may caution the prisoner as to the irrelevance of his defence, but should not stop him in any particular line of defence solely on the ground of such irrelevance, unless the prisoner persists in disregarding the cautions given to him."

Art. 590. When no Prosecutor.—The Judge-Advocate is not to act as prosecutor; and if, for any reason, the captain or the executive officer of the ship to which the accused belongs is not available for the duty, the officer ordering the trial is to name a prosecutor, if a competent officer is available. If there is no prosecutor, the court and Judge-Advocate must ask such questions as will bring the whole case before the court in the fullest manner.

Art. 591. Prisoner's objection to Members.—As soon as the court is assembled, and the absence of any officers, junior to the president, duly accounted for, the prisoner is to be brought in, and the prosecutor and audience admitted. The Judge-Advocate will then read the warrant for assembling the court, and the names of the officers composing the court, and will ask the prisoner if he objects to any of them. He cannot object to the Judge-Advocate. 2. If more than one officer is objected to, the objection to each officer will be disposed of separately, and the objection to the lowest in rank will be disposed of first; and on an objection to an officer, all the other officers present shall vote on the disposal of such objection, notwithstanding that objections have been made to any of those officers. On an objection being allowed, the officer is at once to retire, and his place is to be filled up before considering an objection against another officer. If the president is objected to, and the objection is allowed, the court is to adjourn until a new president is appointed under Art. 584. 3. When any officer is objected to on the ground of being summoned to give evidence as a witness, if it be found that the objection is made in good faith, and that the officer is to give evidence as to facts, and not merely as to character, the objection, whether made by the accused or by the prosecution, should be allowed. 4. If it be found that the officer was summoned to give evidence without a sufficient cause, and merely to disqualify him from sitting, the court is to exercise its discretion in regard to disallowing the objection. 5. An officer, whether previously objected to or not by either side, is not necessarily disqualified from being examined as a witness if it be found in the course of the proceedings that he can give material evidence. 6. Presence throughout of all Members of Court.—A member of a court who has been absent while any part of the evidence on the trial of a prisoner is taken can take no further part in the trial, but the court will not be affected except as provided by section 60 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1866.

Art. 592. Procedure.—If the prisoner has not any further objection to make to the constitution of the court, the members and the Judge-Advocate will then take the oaths in the manner prescribed by the Naval Discipline Act or Acts in force, after which the Judge-Advocate will read the charge against the prisoner, and the circumstantial letter Art. 582 (a), omitting any matter referring to the previous character or conduct of the prisoner, or containing allusions to his prejudice, according to Art. 582, paragraph 4.

Art. 593. Prisoner not required to Plead.—The prisoner is not to be called on to plead to the charge or charges; but should he voluntarily plead guilty, his plea is to be recorded on the minutes. In such a case, the prisoner may, before the court proceeds to deliberate on the sentence, lay before the court a statement in mitigation of punishment, and call evidence as to his general character, but on no other point. If from such statement, or otherwise, it appears to the court that the prisoner did not understand the effect of his plea of guilty, the court shall recommend the prisoner to withdraw his plea; but if the plea of guilty is not so withdrawn, it is to be recorded on the minutes, and sentence passed accordingly.

Art. 594. Oath to Witnesses.—To this article has been added:—"2. Swearing of Interpreter and Shorthand Writer.—At any time of the trial an impartial person may, if the court think it necessary, and shall, if either the prosecutor or the prisoner requests it on any reasonable ground, be sworn to act as interpreter. 3. An impartial person may, at any time of the trial, if the court think it desirable, be sworn to act as a shorthand writer. 4. Before a person is sworn as interpreter or shorthand writer, the prisoner should be informed of the person who is proposed to be sworn, and may object to such person as not being impartial; and the court, if it think that such objection is reasonable, shall not swear that person as interpreter or shorthand writer. 5. When a shorthand writer is employed, the evidence given by a witness shall always be read over to him by the shorthand writer before the witness leaves the court. 6. The shorthand writer's notes, transcribed by him, and certified by the Judge-Advocate, will constitute the original proceedings of the court. 7. Oaths for shorthand writer and interpreter.—The form of oath for a shorthand writer shall be:—'I, A.B., do most solemnly swear (or affirm), that I will truly take down, to the best of my power, the evidence to be given before this court-martial, and such other matters as I may be required, and will, when required, deliver to the court a true transcript of the same; so help me God.' 8. The form of oath for an interpreter shall be:—'I, A.B., do most solemnly swear (or affirm), that I will, to the best of my ability, truly interpret and translate, as I shall be required to do, touching the matter before this court-martial; so help me God.' 9. The invocation in the above oaths is to be omitted when the person conscientiously objects to be sworn. 10. Swearing of person according to the form of his religion.—An oath may be administered in such form and with such ceremonies as the person to be sworn declares to be binding on his conscience."

Art. 596. Duties of Judge-Advocate.—Add, "2. The prosecutor and the prisoner when undefended, respectively are, at all times after the Judge-Advocate is appointed, entitled to his opinion on any question of law relative to the charge or trial, whether he is in or out of court, subject, when he is in court, to the permission of the court. 3. Whether consulted or not, he will inform the convening officer and the court of any informality or defect in the charge or in the constitution of the court. 4. Any information, advice, or opinion, given to the court on any matter before the court will be entered in the proceedings, if he or the court desire it. 5. The Judge-Advocate has the duty of taking care that the prisoner does not suffer any disadvantage in consequence of his position as prisoner, or of his ignorance or incapacity to examine or cross-examine witnesses or otherwise, and may for that purpose, with the permission of the court, call witnesses and put questions to witnesses which appear necessary or desirable to elicit the truth. 6. In fulfilling his duties the Judge-Advocate will be careful to maintain an entirely impartial position."

Art. 600. Examination of Witnesses.—Witnesses must not be present in court during any part of the proceedings (unless by permission of the court), except when under examination, and except when the court reopens after it has been cleared for the finding and for the framing of the sentence. 2. Examination of Prisoners.—In the examination of witnesses, the following order shall be observed: First, such as are in support of the charge are to be examined by the prosecutor; after which, they may be examined by the court and Judge-Advocate; then cross-examined by the prisoner if he desires to do so; and finally re-examined by the prosecutor, but only on matter arising out of the cross-examination. 3. The prosecutor is not bound to call all the witnesses whose names are on the list given to the prisoner, but he should call such of them as the prisoner desires to be called, in order that the prisoner may, if he thinks fit, examine them. 4. After the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, then such as are produced on the part of the accused are to be examined, and the prisoner is to begin with his questions. After they have been examined by the prisoner, they may be examined by the court and the Judge-Advocate; then cross-examined by the prosecutor, if he wishes to do so; and then re-examined by the prisoner, but only on matter arising out of the cross-examination. 5. The court and the Judge-Advocate may also put questions to witnesses at any period of their examination. 6. If a question proposed is objected to, the opinion of the court shall be taken, and the question shall be admitted or rejected, as the majority shall agree.

Art. 608. Sentence.—The court shall then be again cleared, and shall consider and determine on the punishment proper to be inflicted in conformity with the finding. The Judge-Advocate shall draw up the sentence accordingly; it shall be signed by every member of the court by way of attestation, notwithstanding any difference of opinion there may have been among the members, and be countersigned by the Judge-Advocate. The court shall then be reopened, and the prisoner being present, the Judge-Advocate shall, by direction of the court, pronounce the sentence. 2. Notations of conduct of witnesses, and representations of matters arising out of court-martial.—If the court desires to draw attention to the conduct, or manner of giving evidence, of any witness, an entry to that effect should be made on the minutes after the sentence, of which, however, it is not to form any part unless sentence is passed on such witness under Section 66 of the Naval Discipline Act, 1866. 3. Except as above, all representations which the court may desire to make with reference to matters arising out of the court-martial are to be made the subject of a separate letter, signed by the president before the court is dissolved, and are not to form part of the recorded proceedings of the court.

Art. 613. Corporal Punishment is altered to:—When a court-martial awards corporal punishment, it is not to be carried out without the previous approval of the Admiralty.

Art. 616. Procuring attendance of Witnesses now commences:—"Proper steps are to be taken to procure the attendance of the witnesses whom the prosecutor or prisoner desires to call, and whose attendance can reasonably be procured; but if it appears that any witness has been summoned without due cause, the person requiring the attendance of such witness may, at the direction of the Admiralty at home, or Commander-in-Chief abroad, be required to defray the cost (if any) of such attendance." Subject to this provision, expenses of witnesses may be paid as already provided for.

"Hopeful" writes:—"That the 'Purchase subaltern' has had no indulgence granted to him by the new Warrant is patent, nor is there much hope of any amendment in his favour, as far as pension is concerned. A boon, however, costing nothing, and to which the above class can fairly lay claim, can easily be vouchsafed, if the War Secretary will concede to those who purchased their subaltern commissions some extension of time beyond the age of 48 for compulsory retirement in the rank of major. Officers who entered the Army after the abolition of Purchase have that limit allowed to them, and it is noticeable that the principle of some extension to Purchase officers in this respect is recognised by the fact that Purchase captains are granted two years extra (i.e., up to 50) beyond the period allowed to an entirely non-Purchase officer."

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The 15th Hussars (on Monday), the 3rd Hussars (on Wednesday), and the 2nd Dragoon Guards (on Thursday), were exercised in field-firing. Each man was supplied with ten rounds of ball cartridge, and in the position attacked were placed four dummy guns and 200 wooden figures. It is said that the practice was not as good as was expected.

Exercises in minor tactics will terminate on the 14th inst. The drill season at Aldershot has been very dull.

All officers who have not been through a course of gymnastics have been ordered to report themselves to the gymnasia on Monday next.

Captains Power and Lousada, and Lieutenant Grosvenor, 84th Regiment, have been examined for promotion, and have been found qualified.

The Committee on Versmann's moss litter having reported favourably, a large quantity (about 40 tons) has arrived for further trial.

A balance-sheet of the Aldershot Divisional Race Fund has been published by the honorary secretary, Lieutenant-Colonel Toogood, which shows a total balance credit of £936 8s. 2d. A balance of upwards of £620 has accrued from the spring and summer race meetings.

Seven officers and 250 men of the Guards arrived during the week for musketry practice at the Ash ranges.

One hundred recruits from the Depôt at Winchester joined the 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade on Wednesday.

Surgeon Bourke has been ordered to proceed to Woolwich for duty.

Lieutenant-Colonel C. R. T. Davidson, R.E., has been ordered from Weymouth to Aldershot.

"Fleetwood" writes:—"This morning I entered my quarters in a barrack in a Lancashire sea-side village, which, throughout the summer and autumn months, is infested by a class of barbarians known in these parts as 'the cheap tripper.' The name speaks for itself. One of these beings, feeling playfully inclined, could not resist the temptation of putting a brickbat through my window, and I found it comfortably ensconced on my dressing-table, having left destruction in its wake. On inquiry, I am informed that to pay barrack damages for the window is the only satisfaction left me, the destroyer, of course, having taken good care to make tracks, as soon as his work was completed. The old inhabitants of the barracks inform me this is quite an ordinary occurrence. Now, it is only fair that damage done to Government property by the public should be made good at the public expense, and not by the wretched officer, who, surely, has enough already to make good at his own expense, which should be paid for by the public; and whose handsome salary (about 5s. 3d. a day), allowed by a 'Liberal Government,' would soon be reduced to nil, should he have the misfortune to be long quartered in a place like this."

Cases having occurred of men losing their medals by sending their jackets or tunics to the tailor's shop without first removing their decorations, directions have been given that in future all decorations are to be taken off the garments before being sent to a shop for repair.

THE FRENCH CHINA SQUADRON.

The following particulars of the vessels forming the Squadron of the French Commander-in-Chief in China may not prove uninteresting. The squadron was, at the end of September, composed of four ironclads, one heavy frigate, two cruisers of the second class, three cruisers of the third class, one screw aviso, five paddle avisos, sixteen gunboats, and six transports. The Bayard, flagship, Captain Parrayon, is a wood-built ironclad of the second class, launched at Brest in 1880. Her armament consists of four $9\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns in the barbettes, six $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns in the battery, and two centre-pivoted $7\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns on deck. She also carries four Hotchkiss machine-guns, as well as a supply of Whitehead, Harvey, and spar torpedoes. Her complement is 21 officers and 429 men, which are formed into four compagnies de marche of 101 men each. The principal dimensions of the Bayard are:—Length, 265 ft. 9 in.; beam, 57 ft. 3 in.; depth, 25 ft. 5 in.; draft, 26 ft.; displacement, 5,881 tons. Her twin-screw engines, from the Creusot Works, propel the vessel at a speed of 14·2 knots per hour. The maximum thickness of armour (Wilson's compound plates), is 10 in. The Atalante, Captain Galache, was launched at Brest in 1868, and is one of the seven vessels of the now obsolete Alma type. Her wooden hull is 230 ft. long, 46 ft. 7 in. broad, 23 ft. deep, and has a displacement of 3,825 tons on a draft of 23 ft. 6 in. She carries an armament of six $7\frac{1}{2}$-in. and six $4\frac{3}{4}$-in. guns, and the maximum thickness of her armour is 6 in. Her crew numbers 372 officers and men. The engines, of 1,640 indicated horse-power, were manufactured at the Mazeline Works, and the speed attained on the trial-trip was 11·8 knots per hour. The Atalante has proved herself a good sea boat, and is one of the handiest vessels in the French Navy, being capable of describing a complete circle in 4 min. 40 sec. The ironclads Victorieuse, Captain D'Oncieu de la Bâtie, and Triomphante, Captain Baur, are sister-ships, and were launched, the former at Toulon in 1875, and the latter at Rochefort in 1877. Their chief dimensions are:—Length, 285 ft. 8 in.; beam, 48 ft. 9 in.; depth, 23 ft. 8 in. The Victorieuse has a displacement of 4,176 tons, and engines, manufactured at Indret, of 2,214 horse-power. The displacement of the Triomphante is 4,127 tons, and her engines, Mazeline's, develope 2,200 horse-power. When new, both vessels realised a speed of about 12·5 knots per hour. They each carry an armament of six $9\frac{1}{2}$-in., one $7\frac{1}{2}$-in., and six $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns, and they are protected by armour 6 in. in thickness. The crew of each vessel is composed of 367 officers and men. Both ironclads are constructed of wood. Chief among the unarmoured vessels composing the French squadron is the powerful frigate Tourville, Captain Bosc. She was launched at La Seyne in 1876, and was considered as the answer of the French Government to the cruisers of the Shah, Active, Bacchante, &c., types. Her armament is composed of twenty-one guns, viz., seven $7\frac{1}{2}$-in. on deck, and fourteen $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. in the battery, besides which she is fitted with apparatus for discharging Whitehead torpedoes. Her hull, which is of iron cased with wood, is 322 ft. 5 in. long, 50 ft. 6 in. wide, 27 ft. 10 in. deep, and has a displacement of 5,616 tons, on a draught of 25 ft. 2 in. She was supplied by the Société des Forges et Chantiers with engines of 7,466 indicated horse-power, which, on the first trial-trip, propelled the cruiser at the high speed of 16·9 knots per hour. Her complement is 555 officers and men. The Villars, Captain Dewatre, and Château-Renaud, Captain Boulineau, are cruisers of the second class, but differ greatly both in design and armament. The former is a wood-built vessel, and was launched at Cherbourg in 1879. Her dimensions are:—Length, 249 ft. 4 in.; beam, 38 ft.; depth, 22 ft. 10 in.; displacement, 2,268 tons; draft, 17 ft. 2 in. Engines, manufactured at Indret, of 2,764 indicated horse-power; speed, 15·5 knots per hour. Armament, fifteen $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns and Whitehead torpedoes. Crew, 263 officers and men. The Château-Renaud, launched at Havre in 1868, is also built of wood, but she is somewhat smaller than the Villars, namely, 259 ft. 6 in. long, 35 ft. 1 in. wide, 19 ft. 1 in. deep, has a draft of 18 ft. 9 in., and a displacement of 1,830 tons. She carries an armament of seven $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns. The engines are of 1,701 indicated horse-power, and the maximum speed of the vessel, when new, was 14·3 knots per hour. The three cruisers of the third class, Hamelin, Captain Roustan (launched at Brest in 1866), Kersaint, Captain de Beaumont (launched at Cherbourg in 1869), and Volta, Captain Fournier (launched at Cherbourg in 1867), each carry an armament of one $6\frac{1}{4}$-in. and five $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns. They are all built of wood, the Hamelin and Kersaint being sister-ships. The dimensions of these two vessels are:—Length, 207 ft. 8 in.; beam, 34 ft. 2 in.; depth, 17 ft. 8 in.; draught, 15 ft. 6 in.; displacement of 1,255 tons. They are provided with engines of about 1,150 indicated horse-power, and attain a speed of twelve knots per hour. The Volta is very similar in size to the above, and has a displacement of 1,300 tons, and engines of 1,066 horse-power. Her maximum speed is 12·8 knots per hour. Each of the above vessels carries a complement of 150 officers and men. The aviso Parseval, Captain Thounens, is a wooden vessel, launched at Rochefort in 1877. She carries an armament of four $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns, and a crew of 105 men. In size, she resembles the larger class of British gun-vessel, her dimensions being:—Length, 199 ft. 6 in.; beam, 28 ft. 11 in.; depth, 14 ft. 6 in.; draught, 14 ft.; displacement, 820 tons. She is fitted with engines of 770 indicated horse-power, which propel her at the rate of 12 knots per hour. Her crew numbers 102 officers and men. The avisos Alouette, Pluvier, Eclair, and Trombe are wooden paddle-vessels of modern construction, built specially for river service. They are 164 ft. long, 24 ft. 6 in. wide, 11 ft. 6 in. deep, draw 6 ft. 8 in. of water, have a displacement of 486 tons, and engines of 440 indicated horse-power. They carry only three Hotchkiss machine-guns each, an armament which is reported to have proved inadequate for the service on which they are at present engaged, and they will, therefore, probably be armed provisionally by the Admiral with one or two long guns of a light calibre each. Of the 16 gunboats attached to the French Squadron, the Vipère is the largest, viz., 145 ft. 6 in. long, 24 ft. wide, 10 ft. 10 in. deep, with a displacement of 463 tons, and a draught of 9 ft. 8 in. She was built on the composite principle in 1881, and was fitted by the Claparède Company with engines of 440 horse-power. Her speed is 9·5 knots, and she carries an armament of two $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. and two 4-in. guns. The gunboats next in size are the Lutin and Lynx, composite-built, and launched in 1877 and 1878 respectively. They each carry one $7\frac{1}{2}$-in. and two 4-in. guns, and are 144 ft. 8 in. in length, 24 ft. 4 in. in width, 9 ft. 10 in. in depth, draw 9 ft. 6 in. of water, and have a displacement of 466 tons. Their engines, Claparèdes, indicate 440 horse-power. The Leopard and Fanfare are wooden gunboats, launched in 1868. They are sister-ships, but the former developes a higher rate of speed than the latter, viz., 9·6 instead of 8·4 knots. Their dimensions are:—Length, 142 ft. 6 in.; beam, 24 ft. 4 in.; depth, 9 ft. 8 in.; draft, 8 ft. 6 in.; displacement, 447 tons. They are propelled by twin-screw engines of 278 and 235 horse-power respectively, and carry one $7\frac{1}{2}$-in. and one $4\frac{3}{4}$-in. guns each. The Surprise is an old wooden boat, built in 1863, and is nearly worn-out. She is 127 ft. 5 in. long, 22 ft. wide, 9 ft. 4 in. deep, has a draft of 9 ft., and a displacement of 365 tons. Her speed is nine knots, and her engines are of 206 indicated horse-power. She carries two $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. guns. The remainder of the gunboats were built especially for service in Chinese waters, and are all of the same design and size. Their names are Carabine, Contelas, Escopette, Estoc, Framée, Hache, Javeline, Massue, Musqueton, and Yatagan. They are built of wood, and were launched between 1866 and 1869, their dimensions being:—Length, 81 ft. 9 in.; beam, 16 ft. 2 in.; draft, 5 ft. 6 in.; displacement, 100 tons. Engines, 50 indicated horse-power; speed, six knots per hour. They are armed partly with one $6\frac{1}{2}$-in. gun, and partly with one $5\frac{1}{2}$-in. and one $2\frac{3}{4}$-in. guns. The transports at present on the China station, or on their way out, are the Cher, Annamite, Drac, Mytho, Tonquin, Bien-Hao, Saône, and Vinh-Long. They vary in size from 5,623 to 1,596 tons, and are armed with from two to four guns each.

THE PROMOTION OF REGIMENTAL OFFICERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In a leading article in your issue of the 22nd inst., you draw attention to the present system by which officers are promoted provisionally, not having passed the prescribed examination. It seems to me that the fairest plan, in cases where an officer has made a satisfactory claim for provisional promotion, is that he should be promoted on the understanding that he will only receive the pay of the junior rank, until he has passed the necessary examination within a certain period—say six months. Should he be successful, he would be confirmed in his promotion, and receive the higher rate of pay from the date he was originally gazetted; but should he fail, his promotion should be at once cancelled and the next senior promoted from the date on which the original vacancy occurred. It certainly is quite impossible to understand on what principle these provisional appointments are made; in one regiment, during the present year at least, one captain was promoted provisionally, and shortly afterwards a junior captain, who had passed the Examination for admission to the Staff College, was promoted over the heads of fifteen of his seniors, though at the time he was gazetted several of these officers were undergoing examination, and the majority of them are now reported as duly qualified for promotion. This system seems to me to press particularly severely on officers holding appointments as adjutants of Auxiliary Forces, who can rarely be spared for four months to go through the necessary course of garrison instruction, and I am aware of several instances in which officers have had to resign their adjutancy or forego their promotion. Of course, they preferred the former alternative, and with no doubt considerable pecuniary loss to themselves.—I am, &c., MILES.

"A. G." writes:—"With reference to 'A. H. F.'s' proposal, in the Army and Navy Gazette of July 21, that those who entered the service by obtaining non-purchase commissions from Sandhurst should be allowed some compensation for the £450 which is now lost to them on retirement, such as the option of retiring after 19 years' service on the same terms as are at present granted after 20 years', would, I think, should there be no chance of their rate of pension being increased, be very acceptable to many who saw no prospect of future promotion; as a year or 18 months, generally the latter, was lost while at Sandhurst, which may have made a great difference to some; and besides the time lost, also the expense incurred while at the College, which was saved by those passing the 'direct' examination."

The Army.

1st Life Guards. It has been decided to erect a memorial chapel in connection with the parish church of Holy Trinity, Windsor, in commemoration of the Egyptian campaign, in the form of a chancel aisle, for the officers of the different regiments of the Household Brigade quartered in the Royal borough. It will meet some of the more pressing demands made for increased accommodation. The architect is Mr. Stephen Wyborn, of Windsor, and the work will be proceeded with at once.

4th Dragoon Guards. The decision of the authorities to give the regiment another year at Brighton has caused great satisfaction to the inhabitants, with whom it is very popular.

5th Dragoon Guards. The regiment will remain at York throughout the winter.

7th Dragoon Guards. The regiment will spend the winter at Shorncliffe.

1st Royal Dragoons. The regiment has left for Dublin during the week as follows:—One troop for Athlone on Tuesday, one troop for the Curragh yesterday, three troops for Newbridge on Thursday, and head-quarters and the remainder of the regiment for Newbridge yesterday. The Irish Times says:—"It must have been extremely gratifying to Lieut.-Col. Hutton, officers, non-commissicned officers, and men of the regiment to have listened to the highly-flattering address spoken by Gen. Sir Thomas Steele, K.C.B., after divine service on Sunday at the Royal Hospital, prior to the regiment marching to barracks. At the request of the General, the regiment was formed into a hollow square, when he addressed it as follows:—'Lieut.-Col. Hutton, officers, and men of the Royal Dragoons,—I regret I have not had an opportunity of addressing a full parade of the regiment prior to its taking its departure from Dublin, owing to the inspection having taken place. There is no regiment of cavalry in her Majesty's service that I know so well as the Royal Dragoons. Ten years ago it was in my command at the Royal Barracks, and afterwards at Aldershot. For the past two years it has been under my immediate observation, and I have had frequent opportunities of seeing it in the field; and from its steadiness on parade, and smartness in manœuvring, the soldierly appearance of the regiment either on or off parade, and from the excellent conduct of the men, it will be a pleasing duty for me, when I receive the confidential report from the Inspector-General of Cavalry in Ireland, to supplement it with a special report of my own to H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, mentioning my very high opinion of the regiment. Further, I am of opinion that with any regiment of cavalry in her Majesty's service you will bear a very favourable comparison. The high state of discipline in which I find the regiment reflects great credit on you, Col. Hutton, officers, and men. It is not one man alone who can keep up a well-established discipline. No, it requires the united co-operation of every one in the regiment, and the excellent tone that exists in the Royal Dragoons between officers and men leaves me no doubt as to what I say. In conclusion, I have only to add that you have my good wishes wherever you may go.'"

4th Hussars. The regiment, according to present arrangements, will remain at Hounslow until next summer. The Volunteer Service Review has the following:—"Since the last issue of this journal, in which we referred to what is now known as the Hampton Court scandal, we have had the advantage of obtaining some further particulars as to this remarkable case, and have had also the opportunity of perusing many comments in the public press bearing on the subject. We are glad to observe that the educated press has only taken one view of the case, namely, that whatever punishment overtook Private Kimber was richly deserved by that individual, and that the proceedings of the court-martial, together with the subsequent sentence, formed a very appropriate climax to the affair. It is with considerable surprise, therefore, that we learn that Private Kimber is likely to have the balance of his sentence remitted, for reasons not fully explained. The officers who took part in the court-martial will, no doubt, feel highly flattered at this dénouement in the case, and will probably think themselves fortunate that they have escaped without some marks of displeasure from the new head-quarters, which, we understand, are temporarily removed to Fleet Street. It is from this latter place that the influences which are to regulate the proceedings of the military authorities are to emanate in future. Any discontented soldier has only to invoke the aid of the powerful genii located on the other side of Temple Bar to be sure of success in any little enterprise he may have in view, whether it be to steal the property of his comrades, libel his officers, or indulge in insubordination in a general sort of way. We are loth to believe in the foundation for the reports which herald this new departure; but, should Private Kimber be released from custody, we shall know exactly what to expect in future. The next step would undoubtedly be to make him a non-commissioned officer, for the case, logically put, admits of two interpretations only. Either he is guilty of the charge for which he was tried (in which case he deserved all the punishment he was sentenced to), or he is innocent, and therefore should be at once released, and in accordance with the Oriental custom, clothed in purple and fine linen, and set up on high, as a sort of compensation for the past. Under these circumstances, the regiment to which he has the honour to belong will, no doubt, prove a very comfortable residence for both officers and men in the future. It will be well in the meantime to know where the real executive power lies."

Webster not care to complete his four years in command. Lieut.-Col. Barrow entered the 19th Hussars in 1868, long after it had ceased to be the 1st Bengal European Cavalry; he received the C.M.G. for his services in Africa, and since August, 1874, till July 25, 1883, with the exception of seven months, he has been on the staff."

In 1847 he was appointed adjutant and quartermaster of the 6th Battalion of Foot Artillery, serving in that capacity till compelled to take a furlough to Europe, on sick certificate, in 1849. Shortly after his return to India he was engaged in the campaign in Burmah of 1852-53, and was present at the capture of Martaban, the action at the White House stockade, and the operations in the vicinity of and capture of Rangoon. His funeral was attended by all the officers of the Colombo garrison off duty and a number of civilians, notwithstanding the inclement weather. The band played the "Dead March" in Saul.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Major J. Jones, late Qrmr., has submitted to the Secretary of State for War a proposition for the formation of a Tricycle Field Telegraph Equipment, which has been referred to the Royal Engineer Committee at Chatham for report. It is proposed that the tricycles should be specially made and fitted to carry the necessary instruments—drum with half-mile of wire, paying out and winding up apparatus, and provided with field service signalling lamps. The advantages urged are as follows:—1. Ten tricycles would carry as much wire, &c., as the present field service telegraph waggons. 2. Great saving would be effected by the number of horses and men being reduced, also the quantity of forage. 3. The construction of a telegraph line would be executed with greater rapidity. 4. Being light, a tricycle could be drawn or carried where waggons and horses could not go. 5. The construction of several lines could be carried out simultaneously. 6. The tricycles, when unloaded, would be available for the conveyance of messages.

(Where not otherwise stated, the foregoing commissions and announcements bear date October 6, and the current year must be understood.)

Capt. Walter, commanding the Corps of Commissionaires, has issued the following appeal for an annual subscription of £2 from each regiment or battalion of Her Majesty's Regular Forces, towards the funds of the corps:—"The following statement shows the present condition of the endowment fund of the Corps of Commissionaires, and in making the present appeal for regimental assistance, the founder trusts the results already attained are sufficient to warrant his expectation that he will be equally fortunate in securing from the officers of the present generation the same degree of support which was given to the corps by their predecessors 20 years ago. On reference to the financial report signed by the committee of the Officers' Endowment Fund (page 8 of the 'Annual Circular' of the corps), it will be seen that the 'ordinary yearly income' is derived from three sources:—1. That which is derived from the investments of capital and other reliable sources, and amounted during the past year to £1,167 8s. 2. From annual subscribers, amounting to £106 16s. 6d. 3. From employers' annual subscriptions of 10s., which produced £258 1s. 9d.; total, £1,532 6s. 3d. The ordinary expenditure, however, amounted to £1,831 19s. 1d., showing a deficiency of £299 19s. 1d. With the constant progressive expansion of the corps, its expenditure will naturally (though in a decreasing ratio) tend to increase, and the following estimate for the current twelve months will probably be found correct. Owing to the exertions of Major-Gen. Cameron, C.B., commanding the Northern District, a sum of nearly £1,000 has been added to the capital account, and its permanent income augmented by about £40. The first source of revenue may therefore be estimated at £1,210, the second may be expected to produce £120, and the third £280, making a total of £1,610. The estimated expenditure is as follows:—Officers' (7) salaries, £1,450; travelling expenses and extra duties of ditto, £50; contingent allowances, including part of the salary of the medical officer (1,400 men at 5s.), £350; allowances to out-quarter divisions, £100; making a total of £1,950, and leaving a deficiency of £340. It is this amount for which it is necessary to make some permanent provision, and if the 178 regiments of Cavalry and Infantry, including the Household Brigade, will each give an annual subscription of £2, the current expenditure will be met without drawing upon the present or any future capital, which in every properly managed institution should be invested for the requirements of its inevitable growth. In the present number of the 'Annual Circular' will be found (page 10) a short history of the Corps, including an account of the formation of the Officers' Endowment Fund, and at the bottom of page 3 a statement showing the sources from which this fund has been derived. In other places may be seen various statistics and information relative to the Commissionaires; the founder will not, therefore, encumber the present appeal with further details which may be found elsewhere, but merely point out that by its original constitution the corps is virtually placed in the hands of the 'regimental officers,' and that in asking the present generation to follow the steps of their predecessors, who with only six exceptions out of 178 answered the first appeal made to them in 1864, and by subscribing £25 each for a perpetual governorship showed their interest in the welfare of their comrades, and their desire that the institution should have a permanent basis, he is justified in hoping that the foregoing statement may meet with a favourable consideration. The founder avails himself of the present occasion to say that he would feel much obliged if some officer of each regiment of not less than five years' regimental service would become a 'corresponding' member of the institution, and furnish the adjutant at head-quarters with the names of all well-conducted soldiers who may desire to join it at the expiration of their military engagements, and any other information which from time to time may be useful to its interests. He is the more desirous of this assistance, as he thinks that if some officer volunteered his assistance for such a purpose, there would be a better prospect of the non-commissioned officers and men themselves becoming acquainted with the objects of the corps, and also interested in one part of its system, viz., the Convalescent Hospital Fund (papers herewith transmitted), for which their co-operation has been so often but—generally speaking—unsuccessfully invited." The following regiments have already promised an annual subscription, viz., 2nd Batn. Scots Guards, 1st Batn. 17th, 62nd, 72nd, 74th, 82nd, and 2nd and 3rd Batns. Rifle Brigade.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 65 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The House is capable of containing 70 widows, and the Committee appeal to the public for funds to enable them to admit the additional number, the present subscriptions being insufficient.

The funded income of the charity yields only £930, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 6, 1883.

THE Earl of Northbrook has proceeded to Balmoral as Minister-in-Waiting upon the Queen. It is well known that her Majesty takes the most lively interest in everything that concerns her Navy, and there can be little doubt but that its present state and condition will shortly be discussed. It will be for Lord Northbrook to prove to her Majesty's satisfaction that not only is our "First Line of Defence" equal in strength to that of any foreign Power, and well able to encounter any possible hostile combination this country might have to face, but that, taking into consideration that no foreign Power has the same vast Colonial interests to defend, our Navy is sufficiently strong, numerically and otherwise, both to defend our coasts in the event of a maritime war, and to supply squadrons of sufficient strength to protect our interests in the Mediterranean, the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Indian Oceans, while safeguarding our commerce on its ocean highways from the depredations of the scores of Alabamas the enemy would not fail to send to sea. Not only should her Majesty be entirely satisfied that the Admiralty "Order of Battle" or mobilisation scheme leaves nothing to be desired, but all the Queen's loyal subjects should have their doubts on the subject dispelled, for doubts most assuredly do disturb the public mind on this all-important question. And how could it be otherwise? Have we not ranged on one side Admiral of the Fleet Sir Thomas Symonds, Admiral de Horsey, Sir Sydney Dacres, Captain Bedford Pim, Lord Henry Lennox, Mr. Cavendish Bentinck, Sir E. J. Reed, and a score of Naval officers of distinction besides, who assure the country that our Navy will soon be no match for that of France; that it is now unequal to the requirements of the Empire; that our ships, as a rule, are unfit for anything but coast defence, and, as a whole, utterly incapable of blockading an enemy's coast, such as that of France, for example? Sir Thomas Symonds has repeatedly assured the country that our ironclad ships "are unable to save themselves under the commonest circumstances;" that their armament is so defective, with their old muzzle-loaders, that were the French armour-clads to meet ours in the Channel, the issue of the combat, notwithstanding the assurances of the Admiralty to the contrary, would be very doubtful. On the other hand, we have the Earl of Northbrook, Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., and Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, who, on behalf of the Admiralty, have as repeatedly assured the country that our Navy is at the present moment stronger than at any other period in its long and eventful history. These men speak under a sense of personal and political responsibility which carries great weight. At the same time, they have to study the policy of the Treasury, which is expressed by the one word, "Retrenchment." To admit that the statements of their opponents are only in part true would be fatal to that policy. The admission would imply an immense and immediate expenditure. This would mean increased taxation, which, on the other hand, might lead to the Ministry, of which they form part, being turned out of office. Should any fears of this kind impel our Naval authorities to defend a policy which may some day cause the downfall of the Empire, we warn them that they are standing on the brink of a dangerous chasm. There is, we feel convinced, no necessity for concealing the truth. Should it merely be a case of money, we feel certain that the country and Parliament would readily grant as many millions as may be required to establish the Navy on a proper footing, and render it adequate to the necessities of the vast Empire whose manifold interests are at all times committed to its care.

We are glad to learn that soldiers in India, in considerable numbers, are willing to extend their service to ten years, each man receiving a bounty equivalent to £12. By sacrificing a large proportion of that Reserve whose services may never be required, the alarming inefficiency of our battalions in India may be remedied, and the rapid disappearance of our home battalions may be checked. Soldiers serving in India, whose term of six years' service expires in May or earlier, are sent home before that month; but those whose term expires later are kept in that country till the following year. Many of these latter wish to extend their service, but their offer cannot be accepted at present, because the General Order applies only to men of between four and six years' service, and excludes those who have completed their term.

Colonel H. Schaw, R.E., has been given the vacant appointment of Deputy-Director of Works for Barracks at the War Office, Lieutenant-Colonel A. G. Durnford, R.E., being appointed Assistant-Director.

We are given to understand that the proposed "Naval and Military Co-operative Emigration Society," for assisting and placing Naval and Military men, their sons, daughters, or families, on lands which it is proposed to purchase in Canada, New Zealand, and Tasmania, is now in process of formation, and that the prospectus will be issued in a few days. This is not intended to be a money-making company, but a society for the advantage of Naval and Military families and their children, and relieving the immense pressure which is caused by increased education and the block in all professional avenues.

Major-General A. A. Nelson, C.B., will be placed on the Retired List on vacating his appointment as Lieutenant-Governor of Guernsey, he being over 62 years of age.

Colonel Lord William Seymour, C.B., Coldstream Guards, took up the duties of his new appointment as Assistant-Military Secretary to H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief on the 1st inst., vice Major-General Martin Dillon, C.B., C.S.I. It is not yet known who will fill the vacancy caused on the list of Aides-de-Camp to his Royal Highness by Lord William's selection for the more responsible position.

Colonel G. H. J. Fraser, R.A., has been appointed to the Ordnance Committee at the War Office, to fill the vacancy caused by the appointment of Colonel R. J. Hay to the Deputy-Adjutant-Generalship at Headquarters.

Major E. Bainbridge, R.A., has been appointed permanently Instructor of Range-finding at Aldershot.

The following officers have been selected for Horse Artillery jackets, viz.:—Captains W. W. Smith, posted to C Battery, A Brigade, St. John's Wood; F. A. Yorke, to K Battery, A Brigade, Dublin; and N. P. Fowell, to L Battery, A Brigade, Sealkote. Lieutenants F. B. R. Toms, to B Battery, A Brigade, Exeter; R. M. B. F. Kelly, to G Battery, A Brigade, Meerut; G. G. Simpson, to A Battery, B Brigade, Dorchester; J. H. Jervis-White-Jervis, to D Battery, B Brigade, Kirkee; J. D. Barry, to F Battery, B Brigade, Aldershot; F. E. Acland, to I Battery, B Brigade, Aldershot; and E. J. Granet, to A Battery, Depôt Brigade, Woolwich.

Captain E. H. Walker, R.A., has been appointed Inspector of Warlike Stores at Bermuda.

We understand Major-General R. H. Sankey, C.B., R.E., the Secretary to the Madras Government in the Public Works Department, has been offered, and has accepted, an appointment in connection with the Public Works Board in Dublin, and will shortly return home to take up his duties.

Lieutenant S. Davidson, R.E., has been offered and has accepted an Instructorship at the Royal Military College, Kingston, Canada.

Lieutenant L. C. Jackson, R.E., has vacated his appointment as Private Secretary and Aide-de-Camp to Sir John Glover, Governor of Antigua, and takes up duty with his corps at Chatham.

The French claim for their field-piece of 80 and 90 millimetres a range of 7,000 metres, which they say is far superior to that of the field-guns of any other power, that of the German guns, which are the next best, being about 6,000 metres. The dangerous zone for an infantry soldier at 1,000 metres is 51, at 1,800 metres 24, whereas with musketry at the same distance the zones are 20 instead of 51 and 5·60 instead of 24 zones, which correspond with those of artillery at 4,500 metres. They argue that mitrailleuses, &c., have no chance against field artillery in the open, and that they must be covered, and well covered, too, in order to do good even at short ranges against artillery.

The French Army is, it seems, troubled by the rage for distinctive and descriptive names which afflicts our authorities. An adjutant and a non-combatant officer are seated at an officer's table in a garrison café: enters a personage. Adjutant: "Who is that?"—Non-combatant: "It is an archiviste of the 3rd class of the Staff Bureau." Adjutant: "What is his relative rank?"—Non-combatant: "He has the rank of a chief armourer of the 2nd class." And now you have it all!

The Parisians who undertook to do the honours of their city to King Alfonso succeeded admirably in playing the German game, if it be the desire of the Prussians to cover the French people in the eyes of Europe with shame. Not only that. If they really wished to do the King an injury, they would have received him in contemptuous silence. Now, they have served him most materially by their outrages. The anger which certain classes of Spaniards felt at the King's going to Germany has been effectually abated, and all classes of Spaniards are united in resenting the insult offered to their King. The French Press, or rather the organs which play on the passions of the ferocious and stupid badauds of the metropolis, are alone to blame for the humiliation to which France is exposed. Even La France Militaire, in its number of September 30, speaks of the King as "ce ridicule petit personnage couronné." We are bound to say our contemporary adds, "Soyons envers le Roi d'Espagne strictement polis." The advice was scarcely "strictly" followed.

The "Hope" gun is before the War Office, on paper. It is a "confidence gun,"—that is, Colonel Hope has, as we gather from some very long letters to one of our contemporaries, made calculations and a model, and he is so satisfied of the results that he has offered to supply the War Office—on the principle of "no cure, no pay"—with "200 armour-piercing B.L. Hope guns" on contract, as to which he is willing Lord Wolseley should be sole arbitrator, without appeal. The War Office has, Colonel Hope tells the readers of our contemporary, referred the offer to the Ordnance Committee, and that offer, he adds, "will shortly be accepted." None will be better pleased than ourselves if the Hope gun, long deferred as it has been, turns out to be all the inventor's fancy paints it to be in practice; we shall be truly delighted if we find the country is at last in possession of such a formidable and economical system of ordnance as Colonel Hope has, he says, elaborated out of his scientific materials, and we trust the inventor may obtain due reward for his meritorious labours and discoveries, should they be verified.

An Austrian officer named Krnka (!) has invented a means of giving to the ordinary Werndl rifle the potentiality of a repeater, by means of a magazine attached to the weapon, for which he claims great advantages.

La France Militaire of September 27 chortles immensely over the toast of General Dragomireff, —"Ce slave énergique et farouche," who at Dijon the other day gave "A la France!" and dashed his glass to the ground. Our contemporary declares that the words and the act have been heard and felt from the Rhine to the Spree. The truth of the story is challenged. At all events, it is a Russian custom to break the glasses in which they have drunk toasts of honour. It really is a little strong to turn a toast into a treaty; but La France Militaire says "the children of France henceforth can only shed their blood" by the side of Russian armies, "henceforth, the sole safeguard of the tranquillity and peace of nations—on the fields of battle which, in consequence of the boundless ambition of one people, are about, sooner or later, to cover with blood the plains of Central Europe."

During the recent Russian cavalry manœuvres on the line of the Vistula, the whole of the 4th Division swam the river Sauprasi, near the village of Novodvortsy, where the river is 15 sagenes broad and 10 ft. deep, the current being 1 ft. per second. The 4th Regiment of Cossacks, headed by the Chef de la Division, swam in ranks at the distance of two-horses length the one from the other. They did the passage in 27 minutes. Rafts were made for the transport of the arms and ammunition. Having crossed the stream, the whole division, covered by the regiment, passed in file over the river at Vassilkovo, where the stream is 20 sagenes broad, 12 ft. deep, and the current 1½ ft. per second. The three regiments passed in two hours. There was no accident to man or horse.

The recent scandals in the Army of the United States, caused by the defalcation and flight of officers in the Pay Department, furnish our contemporary, the Army and Navy Journal of New York, with the text for a lecture on the vicious custom of giving Army offices to reward services, political and personal, by undue promotion, and by appointments in the Pay Department, where young officers receive high brevet rank and are exposed to great temptation at an age when they are most likely to yield to the fascinations of "draw poker," or of other attractive pastimes.

The Army and Navy Journal of New York, referring to the recent paragraphs in Truth on the Chatham practical jokes (sports which are called "hazing," in the American service), seems to approve of the course—which our London contemporary says was followed in one case—of trial by court-martial by subalterns, whose sentence of four dozen stripes, "où le dos change le nom," was carried out on a peccant member of their corps. Our contemporary adds:—"The old-fashioned application of the paddle, in the manner here indicated, is the most appropriate punishment for this boyish offence. To deprive a lad for a time of the potentiality of sitting down, by a proper application to the portion of his person which a soldier never turns to his enemy, would, perhaps, be more effective in curing hazing than an act of Congress." For boys, well and good. But what about young men who have the rank and responsibility of officers? And what about discipline? A Court of Honour is an institution we have long advocated, but it is a foreign institution, and the Adjutant-General is supposed to find "honour" for the Army.

The accounts we receive from the camps at Fonzaso, Acquaviva delle Fonti, &c., though not very ample or detailed, are all laudatory of the work done and of the discipline and intelligence of the Italian Army. The Government has resisted energetically all representations of the importance of having a Military Attaché at the Roman Embassy, but if what we hear be true, the Italian Army is making extraordinary progress towards efficiency in the field, and its tactical dispositions are full of interest and intelligence. The arm of the Infantry, which is not sightly to look at, is immensely powerful, and the men are trained to fire at distances quite beyond our maximum at the butts.

Some few years before the Peace Society induced the Czar to invite a war with England, there was, among the young men about town, living, as many others were, an officer of her Majesty's Guards, who, if not exactly "gay" in the sense of being bright to excess, was still a very life-enjoying man, and warbled through his existence till there came upon him a great sadness in the horrible death by fire of the most graceful and charming of English dancers—if not the only one to whom the adjective could be applied, a mistress of her art—who was burnt almost to death on the stage. That is now more than a generation back—several more than "thirty golden years ago"—and this week the gallant officer, who was not permitted to realise his great ambition in his profession, and was obliged to retire as Major-General, has left the scene of his sorrows and joys for ever, and there are few who knew him who will not have said when they saw the simple obituary notice,—"Poor Michael Bruce! peace to his manes!"

The number of the Revue des Deux Mondes for September 15 contains a remarkable article, "Italie et Levant, Notes d'un Marin," which ought to be read by those who think the millennium is at hand. The "Marin" does not think much of England, and believes all her Colonies would break loose—as Mr. Forbes thinks Australia would—in a great war, but he is sublimely impudent when he actually thinks that France, of all countries in the world, rests supreme on the strength of an idea—the idea of religion! of Christianity!! of Catholicism!!! What do the 40,000 priests say to that?

Major-General Feilding assumed command of the 3rd Infantry Brigade at Aldershot from the 1st inst. Captain Turnbull, 32nd Light Infantry, has been appointed Acting A.D.C.

The Forward, gunboat, will shortly be commissioned for the Australian station.

The alterations in the Hecate and addition of a superstructure for increasing the stability and improving the accommodation of the officers and crew having been carried out by Messrs J. Green, of Blackwall, it is contemplated adopting a similar course with her sister turret-ships.

The guns of the Caroline are to be mounted on the Vavasseur carriages and slides. They will be of the newly-patented breech-loading class, and she will also carry three Gardner machine-guns and two Nordenfelts.

The Royal Navy List is improved each quarter by the addition of fresh matter, and now contains the services of between 3,000 and 4,000 officers. The Navy is now properly represented to the public, and it can no longer be said, "What have our Naval officers done?" and "How do they get their medals?" Col. Lean's Navy List should now take its place with Gen. Hart's Army List, as it gives more information regarding the Navy than Hart's Army List does of the Army.

Orders have been given for the Benbow, Rodney, Howe, and Camperdown to be fitted with Baxter's vertical windlass and steam capstan gear for working chain cables.

The Colossus, whose trial was postponed last week, in consequence of the high temperature of 190° in the stoke-hold and 200° on top of the boilers, was again taken out of Portsmouth Harbour on Wednesday, for a six hours' trial. The changes effected in the ventilation were found to have reduced the stoke-hold temperature to 116°. Her steaming was productive of most satisfactory results. The engines developed a mean indicated horse-power of 7,184 (the contract being for 6,000); coal consumption, 2·36 lb. per horse-power per hour; and 90 revolutions, without the slightest complication. Owing to a defect in a wheel of the steam steering-gear after the second hour of the trial, and the weather at the same time increasing to a gale, it was considered expedient to return to the harbour. It is estimated that she attained a speed of 16 knots. Messrs. Maudslay's efforts in the engine department of this vessel appear to have attained a great success.

The Admiralty have disposed of the Pearl, Rinaldo, and Earnest.

Plymouth Sound, Wednesday, October 4.

We left Torbay on Saturday morning, the 29th ult., and arrived here at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. Strong head winds throughout, and heavy rain in the afternoon. Owing to the heavy weather, the Minotaur and Agincourt "came to" in Cawsand Bay; the others entered the Sound. The bad weather expended itself in a heavy rain squall when we were outside the Breakwater, and cleared up afterwards, when the Minotaur and Agincourt came inside. The P. and O. steamer Shannon arrived soon after us, with Sir E. Malet and suite on board, from Egypt. Leave has been given to special and privileged leave men during our stay. All the ships have been coaled. The Agincourt has had the greater part of her ship's company relieved whose time of service in her had expired. Lady Stewart gave a dance on Monday night at Admiralty House, to which the officers of the Squadron were invited. Steam was ordered for 3 o'clock yesterday, but as a westerly gale was blowing, and it was very thick outside, the Admiral made a signal that he would not leave till the weather moderated, and, later on, that he would not sail that day. We left at 7 o'clock this morning for Bantry Bay.

Obituary.

Gen. Michael Bruce died on Saturday last at his residence, Glenelg, Bournemouth, at the age of 60. The deceased General, who was born in May, 1823, entered the Army in Dec., 1840, and obtained his commission as capt. in Dec., 1845, and that of lieut.-col. in July, 1854. With the latter rank he served with the Grenadier Guards in the Crimea from March 29 to May 30, 1855 (medal with clasp for Sebastopol, and the Turkish medal). Reaching the rank of col. in Oct., 1862, that of major-gen. in June, 1868, and that of lieut.-gen. in Oct., 1880, he was placed on the Retired List in July, 1881, with the hon. rank of gen.

Capt. W. H. Eliot, the acting staff officer of pensioners of the Ottawa district, Canada, died on the 16th ult., aged 58. Capt. Eliot entered the Royal Navy as a cadet, served in the Chinese war of 1842, and was present at the taking of Canton (medal). Entered the Army as an ensign in the Royal Canadian Rifles in 1844, and after a varied service of 17 years in different parts of the world left the 15th Regt. as a captain, to take up the appointment of barrack-master at St. John's, province of Quebec, where he continued to serve until the station was abolished in 1870. Capt. Eliot was then transferred to the Army Control Department, and was appointed to the Ordnance Office in Montreal. On account of his great knowledge of the neighbourhood of St. John's and that portion of the frontier, he was specially appointed additional aide-de-camp to Brigdr. Lord Alexander Russell and his Royal Highness Prince Arthur during the Fenian invasion in 1870, and was congratulated by Gen. Sir James Lindsay for the efficient services rendered on that occasion. On the withdrawal of the troops in 1870, Capt. Eliot was appointed Barrack-master at Bermuda, and has since served at Jersey and Halifax; retired upon a pension, 1879, after a distinguished and meritorious service in all parts of the world of 37 years.

Com. Dashwood G. Tandy, of the Coastguard, Donaghadee, died suddenly on Oct. 3 while driving with his brother-in-law from Naas to Gowran Grange.

Com. Henry T. Laye, Retired List, J.P. for North Riding, Yorks, died at Scarborough this week, aged 75. He was lieutenant of the Endymion in China in 1842, and commanded a detachment that escaladed the walls of Ching-kiang.

Paymaster Charles H. Wells died on September 22, at the Royal Victoria Yard, where he was serving in connection with the Victualling Department of that establishment.

Chief Engineer Henry Scott, of the Dolphin, died in Melville Hospital on September 24, and was buried with military honours in Gillingham Cemetery, on September 28.

Reviews.

SOME MAGAZINES.

The Nineteenth Century. In the October number, the policy of the Ilbert Bill is indirectly criticised by Mr. Justice Stephen in an elaborate review of "The Foundations of Government" in India, and an interesting view of the same subject is contributed by Sir Evelyn Baring, under the title of "Recent Events." The opening pages of Mr. Justice Stephen's paper refer to some observations by Sir Arthur Hobhouse on Mr. Ilbert's Bill, which appeared in the June number of the Contemporary Review. Sir A. Hobhouse objects to its being said that we hold India by conquest. Mr. Justice Stephen admits that to speak of any Government being founded on conquest may sound harsh, and then refers to the different meanings which the word "conquest" has, and to the fact that almost every conquest recorded in history has its own special characteristics. The writer of "Recent Events" does not believe that the real causes of the present discontent are to be found within the four corners of the Bill. No doubt, this Bill has aroused an amount of opposition which the Government entirely miscalculated, and no question of personal dignity should stand in the way of its withdrawal, should it appear desirable on public grounds that it should be withdrawn. But in the opinion of Sir Evelyn Baring, the essential principles of the Bill should be passed into law, and it would be a grave political error to withdraw it. It seems to be felt that, after all, the passing of this Bill is a mere question of time. If it do not come now, it will surely come in a few years, and thus arises the crucial question. Is it better to wait until the necessity for passing it becomes irresistible, or is it better to introduce the system now? In other words than those of Lord Ripon, is it wiser to anticipate a difficulty, or to await a solution until it has become a burning question? This question and others linked with it are of vital importance, and at every corner present no ordinary difficulties. Sir Evelyn Baring's argument is an interesting one, and he opens his own views and states his own convictions with evident anxiety to arrive at just conclusions. The question of short service in the Army, or long service or conscription, is causing in England nearly as much attention as Mr. Ilbert's Bill is causing in India. We have had a great deal written on the subject lately, and we should like to hear more. Even a cursory glance at Mr. Gleig's article on "Short Service" shows his intimate knowledge of the subject on which he writes. The October number of the Nineteenth Century fully sustains the high character it has already attained.

The feature in Blackwood for October is the introduction of "a new poet," in words of rapturous praise that are rarely to be met with. Quite independently of the merits of the book of poems which comes under the criticisms of the reviewer in Blackwood, it is accompanied by some mystery which will of itself strongly recommend it to many readers. In the first place, the title is a quaint one, "Suspensions on the Dominant." Then it has been only privately printed, and has fallen accidentally into the reviewer's hand, so overshadowed in the overgrowth of contemporary literature as to have hitherto escaped observation. Its circulation has been slight, and unfortunately limited to a few friends who scarcely seem to have valued it at its real worth; while, at the same time, the name of the author, but far more probably the authoress, has been concealed even from the publishers under apparently mystical initials. The reviewer's opinion of it is best expressed in his own words:—"For ourselves, we have been so impressed by its refinement of feeling, its symmetry and adumbrations of imagination, that we venture to call attention to it as a noble illustration of our latest and most precious school of poetry." Having stated his opinion in this moderate language, the reviewer selects certain of the poems which he considers super-excellent—one of Ariadne, when Theseus is afar on the horizons dim, and she roams disconsolate at Naxos, till a comforter comes to her aid in the form of Bacchus. Guenevere is also selected as another exquisite picture, followed by a certainly most wonderful ode to a sea-bird. By this time it is probable that the reader's feelings will be so divided that he or she will scarcely know whether to laugh or cry.

The Cornhill Magazine, which seems to be progressing most favourably, notwithstanding the reduction in price, opens its October number with a truly sensational story, "Pelino Viera's Confession," which is not, however, likely to attract many readers. It is followed by a short, but highly amusing sketch of club life, under the title, "On Being Pilled," and a most charming sketch of "Mrs. Opie." We have also a capital instalment of "The Giant's Robe," and a few short tales, which together form an excellent number. We cannot, however, even mutter a word in praise of the illustrations.

The National Review bases its political article on an inquiry as to whether Parliamentary institutions are in danger. The writer, "A Retired Politician," considers it desirable to introduce to the reader a personal sketch of his principles, the mode in which he supports them, and his devotion to the Conservative cause. The article is written with considerable spirit, and states some important facts. A most interesting article on Miss Austen and George Eliot is contributed by T. E. Kebbel.

Colburn, for October, is a very good number. The article on "The Military Resources of China" will prove interesting at the moment. Surg.-Gen. Munro relates several acts of heroism displayed on the battle-field by British Army surgeons. There is also a short article detailing a subaltern's experiences of six weeks in a cholera camp, and giving a good deal of information, medical and otherwise. It is to be regretted that Col. Knollys' series of excellent articles has been brought to a conclusion. "Money's-worth in Our Army" is an important matter, and, therefore, one that requires constant attention. Col. Knollys' series of articles were intended to arouse attention to what was going on inside the banking house where the money intended for the use of the Army is manipulated and disposed of. He has done good service in devoting so much time to the elucidation of several important matters which would have been permitted to continue "sliding" were it not for his interference. The article on "The Military Forces of Austria" is also concluded.

There is nothing requiring particular notice in Longman for this month, but as a whole it is quite up to the average. Bret Harte's exciting story in "The Carquinez Woods" is concluded.

Ward and Lock's Universal Instructor is exceptionally good this month. "The History of Modern Times" is full of good reading. "Electricity and Magnetism" afford interesting information, while "Human Physiology" is treated at considerable length.

The present number of the Army and Navy Magazine contains a good deal of readable matter, both Naval and Military. Col. Malleson has selected Lutzen to represent one of the battle-fields of Germany. Lieut.-Col. Parnell, late of the Royal Engineers, devotes his pen to a consideration of "The Royal Marines and Our Coast Fortresses." The article on "Indian Districts during the Revolt," by H. Keene, cannot fail to prove interesting. There is also in this number an article by a Voluntary Student on "The Royal College, considered in Relation to the Higher Education of Naval Officers." "Incidents in Southern India during the Mutiny-Years 1857-58" is written with much spirit, and forcibly recalls to mind the late Meadows Taylor, the author of "Confessions of a Thug" and some other interesting stories, which were thought highly of at the time. The sketch of the Rajah of Shorapore, who, when a child of seven years of age, was cared for by Meadows Taylor, furnishes an interesting passage in the history of the Indian Mutiny.

The first number of Cassell's Saturday Journal is now published, and is most certainly a truly wonderful pennyworth. It is intended to be an entirely new weekly periodical, which will contain such a variety of sound, healthy reading, that members of a household, from the oldest to the youngest, cannot fail to find something to suit their fancies. In other words, as the publishers eloquently express themselves, "there will not be one single line of dull reading."

Messrs. Cassell have also published a part of their Universal History, which is to be regarded as the beginning of a volume devoted to "The History of the Middle Ages," in other words, a history which will treat of a most remarkable and interesting epoch, and one which is all but inaccessible to the general reader. The first number, which is now published, treats of the rise of modern Europe, and is enriched by a finely-executed frontispiece, which illustrates the imposing ceremony of "Feudal Service."

Amusements.

The Haymarket has reopened after its recess, and resumed the run of Mr. Herman Merivale's version of M. Sardou's play of "Fédora." Certain changes in the cast have imparted to the revival much of the interest of a novelty. Mr. Bancroft, venturing on an embodiment entirely distinct from any hitherto associated with his name, now takes the place of Mr. Coghlan as the avenging Louis Ipanoff, and performs an arduous task better than was to be expected, but not so well as to encourage him in further deviating from his old path of comedy. In the earlier acts he evinced considerable power, but the strong situation at the close of the play, where such intensity of emotion is required, was obviously beyond his capacity of pathetic expression. Mrs. Bernard Beere has greatly matured and most effectively developed her personation of the heroine. Miss Calhoun no longer tries to imitate Mrs. Bancroft as the representative of the lively Countess Olga, which is an advantage to the actress. Mr. Conway seems hardly in his element as Jean de Siriex; but the more subordinate parts are better played than ever by Miss Julia Gwynne, Mr. Elliott, Mr. Stewart Dawson, Mr. C. Brookfield, and Mr. Gerardot. The scenic details are singularly complete.

The Court Theatre, under the management of Mr. John Clayton and Mr. Arthur Cecil, has not a very strong attraction in "The Millionaire," but the comedy is well acted. Mrs. John Wood, Mr. Clayton, Miss Marion Terry, Mrs. Beerbohm-Tree, Mr. Arthur Cecil, Mr. Charles Sugden, and Mr. Mackintosh. The stage arrangements denote careful supervision of every detail. "The Millionaire" seems to be growing in favour with those who love a laugh, and are not too critical with regard to the means by which it is obtained.

Under the management of Mr. Alexander Henderson, the Avenue Theatre was reopened on Wednesday night with Mr. H. B. Farnie's English version of Offenbach's three-act operatic burlesque, entitled "La Vie." It does not afford the best example of the musical ability displayed by the late composer, and the incoherent plot, invented by MM. Meilhac and Halévy, is even more absurd and unsubstantial than we are accustomed to find in these erratic pieces. This burlesque-opera, brought out at the Brighton Theatre about three weeks since, is merely a vehicle for the illustration of a series of hoaxes. Whatever success it obtains will be due to the amusement furnished by Mr. Lionel Brough, Mr. Arthur Roberts, and Mr. Herbert Standing. Miss Camille d'Arville is a lively representative of the Alsatian glove-girl, and Miss Louise Henschel sings with taste and effect as the Baron's daughter. Bright costumes have been provided for a host of pretty feminine auxiliaries, and the general embellishments of the stage indicate a liberal expenditure by the management.

It is understood that Mr. Sims Reeves and Madame Rose Hersee have both accepted engagements to sing, before the season is concluded, at the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts.

The "Streets of London," again having had a prosperous revival run at the Adelphi, closed its renewed career on Thursday night, and this evening (Saturday) will be produced a new and original drama by Mr. G. R. Sims and Mr. Henry Pettitt, called "In the Ranks," and realistically illustrating incidents in a soldier's life. Mr. Charles Warner and Miss Isabel Bateman play the leading parts.

Madame Francisca Ellmenreich made a favourable first appearance on the English stage at the Gaiety Theatre on Wednesday morning, appearing as the heroine of the familiar play of "Marie Stuart." Mr. Burnand's new burlesque drama of "Ariel" will be brought out on Monday night, with Miss E. Farren, Miss Gilchrist, and Messrs. Elton, Monkhouse, Dallas, Squire, and Henley in the prominent parts.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's always diverting entertainment was resumed for the autumn season on Monday evening at St. George's Hall, Langham Place. Mr. Arthur Law's lively operetta of "Treasure Trove," linked with Mr. Alfred J. Caldecott's melodies, together with Mr. Corney Grain's musical sketch of "Our Miss," constitute a familiar but very agreeable programme.

We can with much confidence recommend to the favourable notice of the public the very clever, entertaining, and varied performance of Mr. Du Val, now being given at St. James's Hall. As is known to many of our military readers, Mr. Du Val served against the Boers in the Transvaal, and has written a book entitled "With a Show through Southern Africa," &c., which has been reviewed by the Press as it deserved to be with very great praise. As actor, editor, and soldier, Mr. Du Val, as he spells his name, has travelled much, and has noted what he saw with a keen eye, and a perception of character and life that is turned to good account in his amusing, and we must say instructive, impersonations and narrative. There is not in London, bristling as the vast metropolis is with points of attraction, any place we know of where man, woman, and child can spend a couple of hours more lightly and cheerfully than in listening to the ex-attaché of the Camp Commandant of the beleaguered garrison of Pretoria, and the editor of the News of the Camp, who proved that tam Marti quam Mercurio,—he was able to be a man of action and of deeds, as well as of words. Mr. Du Val is rather down on the Boers. It is a mild revenge, and the Boers may not be aware of its daily exercise here at their expense.

COMMANDER MAXWELL-HERON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—With reference to numerous letters which have lately appeared in the Army and Navy Gazette commenting on a rumour that Mr. Swainson has been selected to draw up a case for reference to the Law officers of the Crown, I am in a position to state that, to the best of my belief, such is not the fact, as I have received a letter from Mr. Chance, the Treasury solicitor, informing me that, according to instructions, he (Mr. Chance) has laid the proceedings of the court-martial before the Law officers of the Crown.—I am, &c., J. Sheldon Hepworth,

Solicitor to Com. Maxwell-Heron.

PROSPECTUS.

THE Postmaster-General having intimated that he will not be responsible for loss or damage to Parcels sent through the Parcels Post, this Company has been formed with a view to take over this responsibility, and undertake the Insurance against loss or damage to Parcels, at fixed rates, during transit while in possession of the Post Office.

The Company will also undertake the Insurance of Parcels other than through the Parcels Post, and such as are now sent by sea, rail, or otherwise, by the Carrying Companies throughout the United Kingdom.

The Directors will in time extend their operations to the Insurance of Parcels to the Continent and all Parts of the World.

It is intended to make application to the Postmaster-General for leave to allow the Agents of the Post Office to issue the Insurance Tickets or Coupons of the Company, in a similar way to that now in use by the Railway Accident Assurance Company, but should the Postmaster-General deem it inexpedient to accede to the application of the Company, the Company are prepared to adopt and carry out an alternative plan, whereby the same results will be secured to the public.

As the objects and aims of this Company are national and in the interests particularly of the trading community, it is not expected that the Postmaster-General will throw any obstacles in the way, but will rather incline towards the proposals of the Company, which have a tendency to further promote and establish the Parcels Post in the public favour.

As the Post Office neither give nor take receipts for the parcels received or delivered by them, it is not unreasonable to assume that many parcels will be unaccounted for, hence the great and urgent need of this Insurance Company, the one thing needed to make the Parcels Post a permanent success.

While the Company is confident of the success and utility of this new feature of insurance, they do not disguise from themselves the many difficulties in the way; at the same time they feel assured that the public will accord to them a liberal and generous support, as soon as they recognise the great benefits to be derived from this class of Insurance.

The commercial aspect of the Company has been highly approved of by all to whom it has been submitted, and from calculations and reasonable estimates formed from the workings of other kindred associations, the financial success of the Company has been pronounced beyond dispute, but to allow and enable the uninitiated to judge for themselves attention is called to the following approximate estimate.

In Germany it is calculated that a parcel is sent for every twenty letters. Should the same rate be attained here, the Post Office will have to deal with about 65,000,000 parcels in the year—a number calculated to tax the energies of a department whose work is already far from light.

Taking the population of the United Kingdom to be in round figures 35,000,000, it is reasonable to assume that on the average every person will receive in the course of one year at least one parcel: this gives us 35,000,000 parcels in transit per annum, and supposing only one in every ten are insured by this Company, at the lowest possible rate of One Penny, a revenue will be derived from this alone of £14,583 6s 8d, and with the estimated expenditure of £8,730 18s 0d; this will leave a balance of £5,852 8s 8d available for distribution as dividend to the Shareholders of over 20% on the paid-up Capital of the Company. These calculations are looked upon by the Directors as the minimum expected results, and much greater results being anticipated, it is only just to say that the outlook of the Company is a very promising one in every respect.

The Tariff of Rates adopted by the Company has been fixed on the lowest possible basis, and in conformity with the established rates of the Railway Insurance Companies, but giving much greater advantages than any other known system in this country. Subjoined are the rates proposed to be adopted under Class 1:—

CLASS 1 (Ordinary Risks).

UNDER £100.		OVER £100.
Not exceeding £2	1d.	£100 and under £200	1s 0d.
£2 and under £10	2d.	£200 ,, £300	1s 6d.
£10 ,, £25	3d.	£300 ,, £400	2s 0d.
£25 ,, £50	4d.	£400 ,, £500	2s 6d.
£50 ,, £100	6d.	£500 and upwards specially arranged for.

Classes 2, 3, and 4 at proportionate rates.

The Directors reserve to themselves the right at any time to alter the Rates, as they may think fit.

It is intended to offer to large Firms throughout the Country special facilities and advantages for fixed periods of Insurance.

Should the Postmaster-General in course of time extend the operations of the Parcels Post to the Continent, it will open up to this Company an almost unlimited field of operations, it is important when viewing the prospects of the Company, to consider well the prospective features attached to this new class of Insurance.

The Company have already received most encouraging promises of support from all classes, and if only a moiety of the Company's anticipations are realized, a great success is in store for the Company, and investors may with confidence look forward to good dividends in the near future.

It should not be overlooked by intending investors, that the Company begin to earn money immediately after the Shares of the Company have gone to allotment, as all will then be ready to commence business operations.

To assure success, and to provide for the proper organisation and development of this undertaking, the Company have secured the services of a competent person, who will devote all his time and energy in bringing the affairs of the Company to a successful issue.

The Directors guarantee that the preliminary expenses will not exceed 10 per cent. on the nominal capital of the Company.

The only Contract entered into is an Agreement dated August 25, which, with copies of Agreement and Articles of Association, may be seen at the registered offices of the Company.

Insurance Companies, like Banks, are recognised as fixed institutions in every country, and when properly and economically managed, no better or safer investment can be found anywhere. Insurance pays! notwithstanding the many heavy losses that occur from time to time, and a glance at the list of insurance stock will show the shares of all good companies standing high above par. There being great difficulty in obtaining good insurance stock at par, this Company offers to the investor an opportunity seldom to be met with. It is expected that the shares of this Company will be taken up very quickly, and that within six months they will be at a premium difficult to be had.

Application for Shares must be made on the forms annexed to the Prospectus, accompanied by a deposit of 10s per share, must be forwarded to the Bankers or the Secretary of the Company, from whom Prospectuses and forms can be obtained.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—Sudden changes of temperature sorely try all persons prone to rheumatism, sciatica, tic-doloureux, and many similar maladies scarcely less painful, though of shorter duration. On the first attack of stiffness or suffering in any muscle, joint, or nerve, recourse should immediately be had to fomenting the seat of disease with hot brine and rubbing in this remarkable Ointment, which will assuage the uneasiness of the part, subdue inflammation, and reduce the swelling. The Pills, simultaneously taken, will rectify constitutional disturbances and renew the strength. No remedy heretofore discovered has proved so effective as the Ointment and Pills for removing gouty, rheumatic, and scrofulous attacks, which afflict all ages, and are commonly called hereditary.

THE current number of the Nineteenth Century contains an article on "Short Service: One Cause of its Failure," by the Rev. G. R. Gleig, late Chaplain-General to the Forces, who claims a hearing on the ground of his being "one of the last of the few who survive of that noble Army concerning which the Great Duke used to say that 'with it he could go anywhere, and do anything.'" The reverend writer begins by avowing himself an advocate of short service, pointing out that by the term he does not mean an Army composed of men with less than three years' service with the colours—a system admirably adapted for the purposes of the German Empire, but in no way adequate to provide for the performance of the various duties required of an English Army, with colonies to be garrisoned in all parts of the world. Mr. Gleig's idea of a Short-service system adapted to the wants of an English Army is enlistment for eight years with the colours, before joining the Reserve. But the "one cause" of the failure of the present or any system of short service is, we are told, our having to maintain in India at all times from 50,000 to 60,000 men, obtained under this system, and whose officers are liable to compulsory retirement, "at stated periods, from places of trust and command, and, after attaining certain ages, to retire from the service altogether." Mr. Gleig maintains that the Line garrison of India now-a-days "desires nothing so much as to get away from it as soon as possible;" and in support of his statement quotes a letter from "an officer who has just returned from that country, in command of a distinguished regiment." The letter referred to gives the two chief causes of discontent as short service and deferred pay, the two things usually, though not always, acting together. Men going to India, Mr. Gleig asserts, always at first desire to get home again. They miss their friends and associations, and dislike the change of life. It takes four or five years to get settled down to like the country; and in less than that time, under the present system, the opportunity of returning offers, and the deferred pay, "which most men consider an exhaustless mine of wealth," completes the temptation to seize the opportunity. This is, no doubt, to a very great extent the fact, and is the cause of the continual drain on the home battalions, in the shape of drafts for the Indian battalions, leaving at home for a sudden European emergency, with the exception of about a dozen battalions, first for foreign service, only skeleton battalions of boys and men unfit for foreign service. To remedy this pernicious state of affairs, Mr. Gleig proposes to re-establish a local European Army for India, the abolition of which in 1860 he declares to have been a blunder, though he admits that the circumstances of the case, and consequent panic, "offer a good deal to palliate, if they cannot altogether excuse, the mistakes that were then committed." The proposal is to create an Army with all the emoluments and inducements to enlist which obtained in the old European Army of the East India Company. The shortest period of service with the colours for which a man should be enlisted must be twelve years, and anticipating the question of where this new Army is to come from, and admitting that the task now is far more difficult than in 1860, comparison is drawn between the successes, in the old days, of the Recruiting Serjeants of the Company's Army and those obtained by the Recruiting Serjeants of the Crown. There are many hundreds of men in all parts of the country whom a few years in the Army have unsettled for civil occupations, and who either cannot or will not work at any steady employment. Such men, Mr. Gleig thinks, would jump at the chance of good pay and little work, and that not for a year or two only, but as a career, with a pension, or, perhaps, some place of emolument or trust in India, at the end of their military service. This might at first abstract from the Reserve a certain proportion of its estimated numbers, but the return to this country of the present garrison would at once compensate, and more than compensate, for the temporary drain on those forces. And then Mr. Gleig proposes not "to let loose, all at once, upon India 30,000 or 40,000 half-disciplined English soldiers," a proceeding which "would precipitate the crisis which the presence of a European garrison is intended to avert;" but to form the new Army, regiment by regiment, in this country, under officers who have served in India, either in the Staff Corps or in Line regiments, and who understand the delicate nature of the task devolving upon a European garrison in its dealings with the Native races of India. Such regiments, Cavalry, Artillery, and Infantry, would remain in this country, until the men were thoroughly acquainted with their officers, and in such a state of discipline as to make it perfectly safe to move them to their destination. One by one, the new regiments would be despatched to take the place of those regiments of the Line now serving in India, and who would thus be released and made available for service in Europe. Such are the lines upon which Mr. Gleig bases his scheme, one which doubtless looks very well on paper, but against which the most serious objections will be raised by all those who know India, and certainly by those who knew the country in the old days of "John Company's" Army. Mr. Gleig cannot be expected, of course, to appreciate the shortcomings which are inherent in any system of localisation for India. The late Chaplain-General looks at matters from the home-service soldier's point of view, forgetting that there are other serious difficulties with which a War Minister would be bound to grapple, before introducing so sweeping a change,—a change, be it remembered, that might affect the future of our Indian Empire to a far greater extent than some suppose. We have no hesitation in saying that the carrying-out of Mr. Gleig's ideas is about the last thing wanted to complete the total destruction of that once glorious British Army, in the achievements of which our late Chaplain-General once bore a most honourable part.

THE Treaty of Versailles gave to French subjects the right to fish in certain waters off the Newfoundland coast. But, as we have already shown, the wording of this treaty is so loose that the French have claimed the sole right of catching fish off that coast within the limits assigned to them by the Treaty. When, however, the context as well as the text is properly studied, but one opinion can be arrived at as to the meaning or interpretation to be put upon that Treaty. By the Treaty of Utrecht, it was provided that Newfoundland and the adjacent islands should be yielded to the British, and that it should not be lawful for the French to fortify any place therein, or erect any buildings, besides stages made of boards, and huts, necessary and usual for drying of fish, or to resort to the island beyond the time necessary for fishing and drying of fish. The article continues, "But it shall be allowed to the subjects of France to catch fish and to dry them on land in that part only, and in no other besides that, of the said Island of Newfoundland which stretches from the place called Cape Bonavista to the northern point of the said island, and from thence running down the western side reaches as far as the place called Point Riche." The Treaty of Versailles, signed on September 3, 1783, just a century ago, provided that,—"To this end [viz., to give every effect to the provisions for the prevention of disputes], and in order that the fishermen of the two nations may not give cause for daily quarrels, his Britannic Majesty will take the most positive measures for preventing his subjects from interrupting in any manner by their competition the fishery of the French, during the temporary exercise of it which is granted to them upon the coasts of the island of Newfoundland; and he will, for this purpose, cause the fixed settlements which shall be formed there to be removed. His Britannic Majesty will give orders that the French fishermen be not incommoded in cutting wood necessary for the repair of their scaffolds, huts, and fishing vessels." But the Treaty of Versailles goes on to say:—"The Thirteenth Article of the Treaty of Utrecht, and the method of carrying on the fishery, which has at all times been acknowledged, shall be the plan on which the fishery shall be carried on there; it shall not be deviated from by either party; the French fishermen, building nothing but their scaffolds, confining themselves to the repair of their fishing vessels, and not wintering there; the subjects of his Britannic Majesty, on their part, not molesting in any manner the French fishermen during their fishing, nor injuring their scaffolds during their absence," The Treaty of Paris, signed in 1814, restored to the French these rights, and restricted the fishing and landing to cure fish within certain clearly defined boundaries during the fishing season. The subjects of his Britannic Majesty were not to land to salt and cure their catch on the coast reserved for the French fishermen. The Newfoundlander living on or near the coast on which the French were allowed to land was placed at a great disadvantage, in comparison with the foreigner. The injustice thus inflicted upon the British colonist can only be excused on the ground of the crass ignorance of those who framed the Treaties. This was the view taken of the matter by Lord Palmerston, who wrote to Count Sebastiani as follows:—"It is true that the privilege secured to the fishermen of France by the Treaty of 1783 has in practice been treated by the British Government as an exclusive right during the period of the fishing season. But the British Government have never understood the declaration to have had for its object to deprive British subjects of the right to participate with the French in taking fish at sea off that shore, provided they did so without interrupting the French cod-fishing. In none of the public documents of the British Government—neither in the Act of Parliament of 1783, nor in any subsequent Act relating to Newfoundland fishery, does it appear that the right of French subjects to an exclusive fishery either of cod or of fish generally is specifically recognised." Governor Darling went fully into this important question in 1856, and wrote as follows to the Foreign Office:—"A glance at the map shows the position which this island occupies in the territorial expanse of the British Empire, lying considerably nearer to the mother-country than any other of her Transatlantic possessions, and distant only six days' steaming from the British Isles. Its shores abounding in fine harbours, and its surrounding seas with the sources of wealth, whilst its inhabitants are a manly and energetic race. Yet the political position of a dependency thus favoured is such that a foreign State enjoys a right to the use of at least one-half of its line of coast, and avails itself of that right in such a manner as effectually to close that portion of the coast, for all practical purposes, against the people of the State to which the soil of the colony belongs." It will hardly be credited, after reading the opinion of these eminent men, that the English Government should, in 1857, only one year later, and with their eyes open, have signed away every right of the British colonist living on the coast, to the French. But such appears to have been the case. True, the Government of the Colony rejected the Convention thus secured by France after the Crimean War, in return for the assistance then rendered to this country in her war with Russia. Nevertheless, the fact remains that the English Government, on January 16, 1857, was willing to part with the birthright of our Newfoundland Colonists. Article 1 of this Convention sets forth that "French subjects shall have the exclusive right to fish, and to use the strand for fishery purposes, on the east coast of Newfoundland, from Cape St. John to the Quirpon Islands, from the 5th day of April to the 5th day of October in each year. They shall have the right to fish, &c., to the exclusion of British subjects, from the Quiripon to Cape Norman; and on the west coast . . . . . . such exclusive fishing to extend to a distance of three marine miles from the strand." Article 2 also sets forth that British subjects shall have the right, "concurrently with French subjects," to fish on the west coast, except at five points specified, but French subjects shall have the exclusive right to the whole strand during the fishing season. Article 3 sets forth that the "concurrent" right of the French to fish with British subjects in these waters terminates on the coast of Labrador, from Blanc Sublon to Cape Charles, at the embouchure and outlets of creeks and rivers. On the Newfoundland coast, between Cape St. John and Rock Point, the French are further granted the right of fishing up all rivers and creeks as high as the tide or salt-water flows, and from Rock Point to Cape Ray this right is made to extend to half a mile up each embouchure. French Naval Officers are also entitled, by Article 9, "to enforce the said exclusive rights of fishing as defined by Article 1, by expulsion of vessels or boats attempting concurrent fishing, in case no British vessel is within five miles." This convention is not really in force, as it was rejected by the Government of Newfoundland. The manner, however, in which the French are exercising their rights, granted under the Treaties of Utrecht and Versailles, so completely prevents the development of that part of the colony adjacent to the "French Reserve," that its inhabitants are at times prevented even from earning a bare subsistence. The words of Governor Darling were forcible enough, and should have warned the Government of the day against granting rights to the subjects of a foreign Power which may be said to have been already acquired by the colonists of the island, when they took up their land on the banks of those salmon rivers, streams, and creeks which the French are now ruining. But the words of Governor Darling, forcible though they are, do not accurately convey the condition of affairs in the colony at the present time. Since that letter was written, Newfoundland has made vast strides, and the valuable copper mines discovered during the last few years are being developed even under French obstruction. A railway has been commenced, to connect the capital with the mining district, and it was at one time contemplated to have a line from St. John's to St. George's Bay, on the west coast; but the project had to be abandoned, because the French objected to the terminus being at any spot within their Reserve. A valuable silver and lead mine at Port-au-Port had recently to be abandoned, the French objecting to its being worked. For several years past, a lobster-canning establishment at St. Barbe, on the west coast, has been doing a good business, preserving some 5,000 lobsters a day, and employing some half-hundred men and women, who would otherwise be destitute. The French are now vigorously protesting against this Colonial industry being allowed to exist within their Reserve, although it in no manner interferes with their fishing, few of their vessels ever visiting St. Barbe. Similar protests have been regularly lodged by the French against two other lobster-canning factories and a copper mine at Ming's Bight, industries which employ many hundreds of hands. French Naval officers seem fully alive to the absurdity of their protests against these colonial industries; but they have to obey the orders of their Government, whose policy seems to be that of endeavouring to drive the British Colonist in Newfoundland far away from that coast on which, in an evil moment, the British Government granted rights to French subjects which, in reality, neither this country nor its Government had any right to deal with. The Convention of 1857 which was agreed to between the Governments of England and France, and which appears to be the one the French now act upon, was rejected by the Government of Newfoundland. Again, in 1860, the Commissioners sitting at Paris attempted to settle the question, but failed. In 1866, in 1868, and in 1875, negotiations were entered into, without coming to any definite result. The Treaty of Utrecht and the Treaty of Versailles grant the French what rights they possess; but the Government of France, acting on the Convention of 1857, because its articles were agreed to by the English Government, and ignoring the rejection of the Convention by the Government of the Colony, claims rights for its subjects which do not belong to them, and which they only now exercise owing to the timidity of the English Foreign Office, which forces the Admiralty to issue such orders to Naval officers sent to protect the fisheries as effectually prevent their in any way interfering with the subjects of France, or remonstrating at the high-handed conduct of the French Naval officers on the station. Under these circumstances, it is indeed very much to the credit of the Newfoundland Colonists that they have not long ere this taken the law into their own hands. There is now a population of over 25,000 on the north-east and west coasts of the Colony. These people must live, and this they can only do by fishing or mining, as that part of the coast is not suited to agricultural pursuits. Hence the difficulties which beset the English Naval officer who strives to do his duty by his countrymen, may well be imagined, as it is only by a judicious mixture of temper, tact, and firmness that harmonious relations can be maintained.

THE Marine Office in Spring Gardens, or more properly speaking, the new Deputy-Adjutant-General of Marines, is not giving that satisfaction to the Marine Forces which obtained throughout the service during the whole term of office of Major-General Sir Charles Adair. We have already had occasion to call their Lordships' attention to one or two instances in which the recent maladministration of the Department has produced wide-spread discontent. In one case, their Lordships have already interposed, and by their timely action have remedied the evil before it had time to do any mischief. No doubt, the other cases calling for redress will in their turn be inquired into, and after mature investigation, be legislated for in such manner as to restore confidence throughout the Marine Forces. One case in particular, however, deserves more than a mere passing notice at our hands. It is that of Major Haseltine, which, in our opinion, is a particularly hard one. In May, 1880, the order was issued for Marine officers to pass the military examination, to qualify themselves for the rank of Field-officers. At the same time, Captain Haseltine was ordered to embark on board the Monarch, then at Malta. When the reorganisation of the corps took place in 1881, Captain Haseltine was promoted, subject to his passing the prescribed examination within twelve months of his rejoining his division. He rejoined in February, 1882, and being at the time down with Mediterranean fever, was sent to hospital, where he remained until May 23. He was then discharged on sick-leave, having lost some four stone in weight in less than three months. Major Haseltine returned to duty in November, 1882, but was prevented from going up for the next Field-officers' examination in January, 1883, owing to the state of his health. He, nevertheless, obtained leave to proceed to Canterbury to pass the riding-school, returning to barracks in February. He went against the wish of his doctor, as at the time he was suffering from three abscesses in his chest, one of which was open, and had affected the breast-bone. Nevertheless, he passed, and turned his attention to the more difficult part of the examination, and passed well in everything except Tactics, in which he was not examined, the examination being held last July. In the meantime, however, Major Haseltine was appointed to the Liverpool Recruiting District, and was ordered to join and take charge on July 1. The examination in Tactics took place on July 4, and, as a matter of course, Major Haseltine could not present himself, although ready to be examined; and believing it would be time enough to go up in January, 1884, he did not trouble his head any more about the matter, devoting the whole of his attention to his new duties. Suddenly, and without warning, Major Haseltine is informed that, having failed to pass the prescribed examination for Field-officer, he is degraded in rank, and will have to relinquish his Liverpool appointment. This is not his only loss. Pecuniarily, it is, of course, considerable; but that is not the worst. His future prospects are entirely ruined. In March, 1884, he will have to retire on account of age, and this is the sole return he gets for over twenty-four years' continuous and faithful service. The whole case seems so hard, and so out of the common run of service cases, that we hope the Admiralty will reconsider the decision arrived at by the Marine Office, and allow Major Haseltine to complete his examination for Field-officer in January, and then reinstate him in his proper seniority as a Major, thus proving to the services over whose destinies they preside, that although mistakes do happen in the very best regulated families, flagrant injustice such as that to which Major Haseltine has been accidentally subjected can never be perpetrated with impunity when properly brought to the notice of their Lordships. The facts as herein stated we can vouch for. They have been supplied to us without that officer's knowledge or consent, and we have taken the precaution of having them verified by inquiries instituted at his Division. Under these circumstances, we deem it our duty to lay the whole case before the public, as one well deserving the most serious attention of the Admiralty.

It is almost a truism to assert that the first and most important element of success in any voluntary course of instruction is its popularity, and without this factor it cannot be efficient. This is precisely where the Excellent as a school fails; and the fact of its having failed has been strikingly demonstrated to us by the spontaneous outburst of letters we have received, in reference to the articles on the subject which we have recently published. Lieutenants of all sorts and conditions, from various ships and various ports, all write in the same spirit,—an absolute loathing of the system, which one of our correspondents rightly describes as "degrading." It speaks volumes for the long-suffering nature of lieutenants that such an anachronism should have been so long tolerated, although it may be a resignation brought about by a lamentable want of spirit in the assertion of their rights, which in its turn has been the outcome of a not unreasonable dread of the absolutely despotic power wielded by the Admiralty. It is incredible to suppose that the system can long survive, now the facts have become public, for we are confident that their Lordships will cause justice to be done to that class of officers who have been frequently called the "backbone" of the service, and justice demands nothing less than a thorough cleansing of the Augean stable, the first step in which should be the suppression of the obnoxious and illegal ordinances which have for some years past constituted the ship's orders on board the Excellent, and the institution in their stead of orders more liberal in spirit, and less at variance with the Queen's Regulations and Admiralty Instructions.

Lord Alcester is "not aware of having expressed the opinion alluded to," by a correspondent who wrote to his Lordship to enquire whether it is true, as stated not long ago in these columns, that Lord Alcester is in favour of combatant officers undertaking the duties of the Paymasters' branch in the Navy. We will not quarrel with Lord Alcester's want of memory, any more than we have over his Lordship's forgetfulness as to the causes which led him to bombard Alexandria. But we must admit being much astonished by his Lordship's further statement to the effect that "any well-considered plan for accelerating promotion in the (combatant) branch in question will meet with his support," for we were always under the impression that it was the duty of the Lords of the Admiralty, and not that of outsiders, to watch over the interests of the Navy, and to well consider plans for the acceleration of promotion in all branches of the service.

The Committee appointed by the Admiralty, under the presidency of Captain Carter, of the Royal Adelaide, to enquire into and report on the fittings, &c., of the new Naval Barracks at Keyham, have been busy this last week selecting sites for the hospital, reservoir, recreation grounds, &c., and were assisted on Wednesday by the Director of Works, who has been paying an official visit to Devonport, and, we are given to understand, the barracks will be ready to receive 1,000 men early next year.

We understand that Commander Lionel de Sausmarez was unanimously elected by the Board of Directors of the Army and Navy Co-operative Stores to fill the seat rendered vacant by the death of the late Admiral Sir Richard Collinson, K.C.B.

The Channel Squadron left Bantry Bay on Wednesday for Portland.

The Navy will hear with unfeigned regret of the death of Lieutenant Hastings Rowley Lees, Gunnery Lieutenant of the Swiftsure, flagship in the Pacific, which occurred at Vancouver's on October 4, from the result of an accident while driving.

Writing from Malta, a correspondent asks :—" When will the Admiralty awake to the fact that other nations are supplying themselves with a class of powerful gunboats as yet unknown in our Navy, which can only reckon on its Condor, Cockatrice, Cygnet, Decoy, Cruiser, and other petty-looking, slow, and wretchedly armed craft. The Tsukusla, a Japanese gunboat, mounting 25-ton guns, recently touched at Malta, and, if report says true, she could soon reduce Valletta to ruins, and that, too, at a range of over four miles, at which distance she would herself be safe from any injury, so far as the guns now mounted at Malta are concerned. Did she dare to come in close, there are, of course, some 24-pounder carronades ready, and a 100-ton gun lying in the dockyard! Ah, well! we have much to be thankful for!"

The Rev. George Carwithen, M.A., R.N., Hon. Chaplain to H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, and Chaplain to the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines, completes his time for retirement on Tuesday next, the 16th inst., and will be superseded by the Rev. E. J. Hitchins, R.N., now Chaplain of the Royal Adelaide, flagship at Devonport. Mr. Carwithen was appointed for the usual term of five years, but, much to the satisfaction of the Division, his time was extended to the date when he would retire from having attained the limit of age. The reverend gentleman has been justly popular with officers, non-commissioned officers, and men, from his geniality of disposition and kindliness to the men and their families, and his retirement is much regretted.

Naval officers detailed for service in a British colony are, under present regulations, subject to disadvantages which do not occur to officers of the sister service while similarly employed. The latter, although seconded, still retain their regimental position, which admits of their obtaining promotion by seniority, while service counts towards retirement, and not only as half-pay time, as in the case of Naval officers. Captain Thomas, who has recently been ordered to Victoria, will, in the present state of the Active List, not retire by age until 1904, as a rear-admiral; as he has hitherto been a prominent officer in his profession, he will probably be desirous of acquiring sufficient sea time to qualify him for flag-rank. Under the present regulations the whole of the time he devotes to the Colonial service will in no way help him. Considering the importance of assisting our Colonies to defend themselves, it would be but even-handed justice to allow Captain Thomas to be borne on the flagship's books for this special duty, a similar concession having been made in the case of Staff Commander Boulton, as is customary in the Hydrographic service, when officers are ordered on colonial surveys. Why should not the same rule apply to all naval officers who, while on the Active List, are detailed for colonial duty?

Captain Edye, R.M.L.I., has rejoined the Chatham Division, after having undergone a course of Field Signalling at Aldershot. Captain Edye is, we understand, studying for the Bar.

Truly there is much matter for wholesome reflection on our part in the article so ably written by a French Naval officer, for the Revue des Deux Mondes. But, Monsieur does not carry his argument to the end; he does not tell us where his twenty cruisers of great fleetness are to get coal wherewith to carry on their continued havoc among our merchant vessels. Constant chasing must soon empty their bunkers, and—the real war—the war without quarter, is well known to be a game that two can play at. He, meantime, conveniently ignores French commerce. Limited as it is, France could ill afford to lose it; and what of the Newfoundland Fishery rights, Martinique, Guadeloupe, Cochin China, possibly Madagascar and Tonquin? We say that war to the knife between England and France might mean the loss of all these to the latter nation; therefore, obliged as we are to our gallant French author for so ably showing up our weakness, yet we would remind him that France also is vulnerable afloat, and that if she is not able to wrest our maritime supremacy from us by main force, she certainly will not accomplish it by twenty cruisers, however great their fleetness may be.

The following officers have passed their examinations at Greenwich, and are ordered to join the Vernon on the 15th instant :—Acting Sub-Lieutenants F. W. Hervey, D. St. A. Wake, E. F. Eyre, J. F. Parry, H. D. Searce, G. G. Browne, G. E. Akers, C. A .Christian, H. A. Hatchard, and G. M. Courage.

The Canadian Minister of Marine, acting on the recommendation of Staff Commander J. G. Boulton, has directed a series of four new charts to be constructed, to include Georgian Bay and the North Channel to Saulte St. Marie, at the entrance to Lake Superior, on a scale of half-an-inch to the mile. Staff Commander Boulton has already commenced surveying the entrance to Georgian Bay from Lake Huron, having hired for the purpose a small tug. Our Canadian correspondent informs us that this work was much needed, as there is a large and increasing grain trade being carried on between Chicago and the eastern shores of Georgian Bay, as well as very great passenger traffic to and from Lake Superior, both of which these splendid Canadian inland waterways will do much to facilitate and develop, when properly surveyed. Staff Commander Boulton has, in a remarkably short time, won the esteem and confidence not only of the public functionaries of the Dominion, but also of all the colonists with whom he has been brought into contact. His energy, zeal, and perseverance in the discharge of his duties have overcome all obstacles, while his general scientific attainments and thorough knowledge of his profession as a surveyor, have already earned for him a very high reputation throughout the colony.

The Admiralty have received despatches from Commodore Erskine reporting that Mr. Thomas Nineham, Boatswain of the Dart, was severely wounded, William Parker, A.B., of the same ship being at the same time mortally wounded, in an attack on the Ballab tribe, in the Island of Amboyna, of the New Hebrides group. The attack was made to punish the natives for the murder of the master of the labour vessel Borough Belle, named Belbin, on July 25.

We understand that the cruise of the Evolutionary Squadron, under the command of Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay, in the Mediterranean, will be extended well into January of next year. The reasons for thus keeping the ships together in Eastern waters are said to be of a private as well as of a political nature. The Superb has had new elevating gear fitted to her old guns, and the Invincible is being employed as transport and store-ship, which keeps her continually on the move between Malta and the Squadron.

The appointment of Major Fuller, R.M.L.I., as recruiting officer at Liverpool, in succession to Major Haseltine, of the same corps, has given general dissatisfaction throughout the Royal Marines. The appointment is a "Marine Office," and not an Admiralty one, but it is felt on all hands that their Lordships should not tolerate what is considered throughout the service to be a very great injustice. Major Fuller has been ordered to proceed to Liverpool at the end of the present month, and this in the face of the protest of all his seniors. Major Fuller has seen no war service, has never been out of England since 1867, and had to forego going to Zululand owing to "varicose veins," which, nevertheless, did not prevent his acting as Instructor of Gymnastics. Numerous letters have reached us on the subject, and each correspondent asks us to call their Lordships' attention to the pernicious system of favouritism existing at the Royal Marine Office, and to suggest that, if the new Deputy-Adjutant-General is unable to dispense his patronage with more discretion and greater fairness, as well as with some regard to the feelings of the officers of the Corps, it would be to the advantage of the service if all such appointments were placed in the hands of their Lordships. In the event of Major Fuller proceeding to Liverpool, we understand that Parliament will be asked to order the production of the reports of the medical surveys on all the officers ordered to Zululand, and who were found to be unfit for foreign service.

At the recent inspection of the Chatham Division of Royal Marines by the Admiralty, their Lordships were pleased to express and record their unanimous satisfaction at the splendid manner in which the gunnery of the Division was conducted under Captain Wright. Particular reference was made by their Lordships to the Nordenfelt machine-gun drill, when the Gunnery Instructor pointed out that, acting on their Lordships' instructions, the machine-gun had been returned into store. Their Lordships no sooner returned to Whitehall than, on October 8, a letter was received at Chatham from the Admiralty directing the Nordenfelt machine-gun to be restored to the Marine Battery, and the instruction in machine-gun drill to be continued forthwith. Strange to say, the Deputy-Adjutant-General of Marines quoted the Admiralty in his letter ordering the machine-gun to be returned into store, and the drill discontinued. He also declined to forward to the Admiralty a letter addressed to him by the Gunnery Instructor of the Chatham Division through the Colonel Commandant, and their Lordships would have remained in perfect ignorance of what was going on, had we not given publicity to the facts of the case. Their Lordships, however, have no sooner inspected the Chatham Division, and ascertained for themselves that the interests of the service were likely to suffer from the strange conduct of the Deputy-Adjutant-General, than they have very wisely at once taken steps to set matters right.

The clipper Djigit, which set out recently to join the Russian Fleet in the Pacific, was one of the earliest of the new clipper series commenced on the Neva in 1876, of which the Skobeleff and Strelok are the latest development. She is 207 ft. long, 32 ft. broad, and 14 ft. deep, with a displacement of 1,456 tons, the engines being of 1,380 indicated horse-power, and the armament comprising three 6-in. guns, four 4-pounders, and three machine-guns. This clipper is expected to remain in the China seas for a period of three years.

Things are looking serious at Canton, where the mob is in such an excited state that the Mandarins are spat upon and hooted in the streets, and the Viceroy has to send for additional troops for the better protection of his palace, and this on account of the strong feeling which exists from the result of the Logan trial. The foreign settlement at Shameen is in a fever of anxiety, and has cut off its communication with the suburb, but it is well protected by the covering guns of British and other foreign gunboats in the river. There is still, however, much cause for uneasiness, when it is remembered that, in addition to those in the extensive city of Canton, the thickly-populated suburbs and the boat population are numbered by hundreds of thousands, so that a rush of an overwhelming, yelling, frantic mob of Buddhists and Mahommedans, with sword and torch in hand, could make a clearance of the foreign settlement in a few hours, without calculating upon the final result to themselves. If, however, things are as bad as represented by telegraph, it is presumed that the residents will not be left to this chance, but that a combined force from all the foreign vessels in the river will be landed, for the better protection of life and property. It is not probable that any action of the rabble, unsupported as it is at present by the Chinese authorities, will bring us into collision with the governing powers; we can fight with the mob, without fighting with China in general. The Chinese temperament is peculiar in this respect, and will offer fight at its extremities while its centre is at peace. In 1857-60, while war was being carried on at Canton, and from the Gulf of Pecheli to Pekin, commerce was peacefully recognised at the mercantile port of Shanghai, at Woosung, Foochow, Amoy, and other ports, and British ships loaded and unloaded their cargoes without molestation in perfect security. Such a state of things could not exist in a European community, but in China it appears as if each city, town, or walled village looked almost solely after its own interests. Under these circumstances, there should be no hesitation as to the course that should be pursued in repelling the aggression of an angry Cantonese mob, as we know, from previous experience, that they can be dealt with without creating very serious complications with the empire; but even in the face of the latter eventuality, a bold front must be shown, should a hostile foot be placed within the British settlement.

It is stated that the heads of Commandant Rivière and of the men who were captured with him have been found at Phu Hoi. If this is the case, it appears that the people of Annam are following the policy of China Proper with regard to the heads of their enemies. In 1857, Lieutenant Hackett, 59th Regiment, was decapitated in a village during the advance on Canton, and subsequently, at the White Cloud Mountain affair, Dr. Turnbull, R.N., senior medical officer on the Staff of the Royal Marines, was cut off from the main body of the troops and also decapitated. His head was found some months afterwards in a glass case in a joss house or town hall at Kong Tsun, and was, of course, taken possession of and buried.

Colonel P. G. L. Smith, Royal Engineers, Admiralty Director of Works, and Mr. W. Willis, Accountant-General of the Navy, visited Devonport on Tuesday and Wednesday last, the former to inspect the works and buildings, and the latter the accounts, at the various Admiralty establishments at that port.

The Morning Post of the 6th contains a letter from Sir Edward Sullivan, headed "Germany," in which he endeavours to correct the erroneous views of the German Army which he maintains are largely held by Englishmen. He says that "the British Radical of the Cobden school" looks on the great features of the German military system with unqualified dislike, and condemns the Germans for converting their whole people into soldiers and their whole country into a barrack; and that our military writers discuss all details of the German Army in a spirit of carping criticism. To a peace-at-any-price party, any scheme of national armament must appear detestable, and more calculated to cause war than to preserve peace. But the majority of sensible men in this country are ready to concede that the Germans are better qualified than we can be to judge of the necessity for their bearing the heavy burthen they have placed on themselves. Some of our military writers attach too much importance to those details in which the German Army differs widely from ours. But in regard to these, as well as to larger questions, practical men are more tolerant. Some of our Military theorists urge us to follow the German example in everything, where it is possible to do so; but most of our experienced officers, recognising in all their force the vast differences in the constitution and circumstances of the two Empires, can understand that what is best for the German may be unsuited to the British soldier. Sir Edward has earned the gratitude of the Army, the best interests of which he has advocated so often and so powerfully. It is with reluctance, therefore, that we express even partial dissent from him on the subject of his last letter.

Inspecting Veterinary Surgeon G. Lambert, from the charge in Ireland, is to be appointed to the Staff at Woolwich, and will be succeeded by Inspecting Veterinary Surgeon W. B. Walters, now on the Staff at Aldershot.

The St. James's Gazette seems to be altogether entitled to be called "The St. Luke's Gazette," when its writers treat the Egyptian question, which is our real Eastern question at present. There was an attack on Sir Evelyn Baring's most reasonable reply to the foreigners resident in Alexandria, who waited on him to represent a desire for an immediate settlement of the indemnity by the Egyptian Government last Saturday, because he reminded them that they did not contribute to the support of the Government which protected them, and which they held responsible in damages when it failed to do so. The St. James's Gazette made the silly remark that people did not pay taxes till they were asked. Our contemporary should have known that the Government is prevented from making any demand upon foreigners for taxes by the capitulations, of which the Europeans avail themselves in all cases.

Lieutenant C. H. Gostling, 1st Royal Scots, has been appointed Fort Adjutant of Trinidad.

Lieutenant R. H. Cholmondeley, 27th Fusiliers, has been appointed Acting Aide-de-Camp to Sir F. A. Weld, K.C.M.G., Governor of the Straits Settlements.

Their undoubtedly exists in our Army a pressing necessity for increased rifle-range accommodation. We believe that Tommy Atkins would take kindly enough to shooting, if the rifle-range was handy to his quarters, but if he has to march three or four miles to practice-ground and back again, and he finds it interferes with his meals, he cannot very well be expected to take the pride he would otherwise do in his weapon of defence. If the Government had the courage to ask for more money to supply the necessary increase in number and extent of rifle-ranges, and ranges were placed as near as possible to the men's quarters, we venture to say that a marked increase would soon show itself in the interest taken in rifle practice throughout the Army. The musketry course, as it stands at present, is almost universally regarded as a necessary nuisance, to be got rid of as soon as possible. Give them rifle-ranges in close proximity to their quarters, and plenty of ammunition free of charge, and the shooting of the British soldier would, we have reason to think, soon improve.

The Secretary of State for War has conferred a good-service pension on Mr. J. Collins, late Principal Veterinary-Surgeon of the Army, on his retirement, in recognition of the services rendered by him while employed for seven years on the Staff at Headquarters.

Deputy-Surgeon-General J. Tulloch, M.D., has been appointed Principal Medical Officer of the Western District, on promotion.

The Institute for Church of England Soldiers, recently opened at Aldershot, is already burthened with a debt of over £1,000. To assist in removing this debt earnest appeals on behalf of the British soldier have been made. Owing, however, to the narrow platform from which these appeals are made, it is impossible that a hearty and general response can be given, otherwise the debt would be speedily removed. This institution will ever be for the few. A Soldiers' Institute based on sound, common-sense principles, having no religious designation, and, therefore, free in reality to all her Majesty's soldiers, is as much a desideratum as ever at Aldershot.

Colonel S. Hackett, half-pay, late 35th Regiment, took up the appointment of Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General at Gibraltar on the 27th ultimo, vice Colonel F. S. Flood.

Lieutenant-Colonel W. G. Brancker, C.B., R.A., has been appointed to the command of the Artillery in the Belfast District, vice Colonel C. J. M'Mahon, R.A.

In the Gazette of the 2nd inst., appeared the announcement, under Royal Irish Fusiliers, "Captain W. S. Terry retires on a pension." This statement is distinctly contrary to fact, the truth being that this officer was compulsorily retired, owing to his committing the unpardonable sin of arriving at the age of 40. He was refused an unattached majority, on the plea that he had not passed the necessary examination, although the authorities were well aware that injury to his eyesight, contracted during the late Egyptian campaign, compelled him to avoid reading for the present.

Lieutenant H. C. Pritchard, 9th Regiment, has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to Sir A. Musgrave, K.C.M.G., Governor of Queensland.

A Distinguished-Service Reward has been granted to Deputy-Commissary-General H. J. Brownrigg, C.B.

We are at a loss to understand why one of the most junior Surgeons-Major in the service has been placed in administrative charge of so important a command as the Belfast District, especially when there are several very senior Surgeons-Major serving in that District. It is by such arrangements as these that the smooth working of the Army Medical Department is interfered with. We presume the favoured one is an out-and-out supporter of unification, and believes firmly in the combatant doctor and all the other "fads" of the "new school."

A sum of over £40 has been subscribed by the 15th Hussars for the benefit of Gunner Marshall, F Battery, 3rd Brigade, R.A., recently injured at a field-day at Aldershot, and who is about to be discharged unfit for further service. It will be remembered that the 15th Hussars were charging some field batteries in position when the accident occurred. A considerable sum has also been collected for the injured gunner in his own branch of the service. The British soldier is ever ready to help his comrade in trouble or distress, and not a few calls are made upon his slender purse for such purposes; but he is not easily moved to part with his hard-earned money to assist in furthering utopian schemes for ameliorating his own condition, which is really tolerable enough, and as a rule, would bear favourable comparison with his mode of life before joining the service, despite the dreadful state of sin and misery in which he is pictured to be living by truthful platform orators of the religious institute type.

Colonel T. E. Hughes, well known on the Bombay side of India as a smart Artillery officer, succeeds General Napier Campbell as Inspector-General of Ordnance, Bengal.

A difficulty seems likely to arise with regard to the appointment of Brigade-Major of the Home District. Major Herbert has obtained his Lieutenant-Colonelcy in the Grenadier Guards, and of course becomes disqualified for retaining the position, and as there are but six captains of the Brigade of Guards available, the field of selection is necessarily limited. Under the circumstances, there are some who contend that the Household Cavalry ought to be given, for once, a chance of putting one of their men on the Staff. The duties surely cannot be such as to unfit a cavalryman of ordinary intelligence from performing them satisfactorily, and the interests of the service would, it seems to us, be served if a judicious concession was made to the feelings of a body of officers who have strong claims, if only on account of the limited amount of patronage which is open to those among them who aspire to other things besides the bare routine of regimental duty between London and Windsor.

Major-General Sir Charles Macgregor, Bengal S.C., Quartermaster-General of the Bengal Army, receives the Indian good-service pension available by Major-General R. S. Hill's succession to colonel's allowances.

The fourth of the series of tactical field-days recently carried out on Wimbledon Common took place yesterday. Colonel Lambton commanded a force from London, consisting of 400 rank and file 1st Battalion Coldstream Guards, one squadron Royal Horse Guards, and five waggons, whose object was to relieve two companies left behind in Wimbledon from the London force, which, at the last field-day, had repulsed the Kingston force, but had, with the exception of these two companies, been compelled to fall back on London by Wandsworth, Putney Bridge being blown up. Colonel Phillips, 3rd Battalion Grenadier Guards, commanded the Kingston force, which had rallied on Barnes Common, and now consisted of two squadrons 4th Hussars, two guns Royal Horse Artillery, and about 250 men 2nd Battalion Grenadier Guards. The result was that, though Colonel Phillips took a vigorous offensive, and prevented the convoy from reaching its objective, yet he was in turn put on the defensive, and the honours were equal.

We understand that it has been considered necessary for the protection of life to close permanently the rifle range at Wormwood Scrubbs, and that the necessary orders have been issued by the Major-General Commanding the Home District. Thus the question of range accommodation for Metropolitan Volunteer Corps is again forced upon the attention of the War Office, and will have to be gone into thoroughly before the appearance of the Estimates for the financial year 1884-85.

Major-General H. A. Sarel, C.B., the recently appointed Lieutenant-Governor, arrived at Guernsey last Wednesday to take up his command, his predecessor, Major-General Nelson, C.B., having left the island the day previously.

The following memo. has been addressed by Capt. James A. Poland to the divisional officers of Coastguard and chief officers of cruisers on the occasion of his resigning the command of the Limerick District:—"You are hereby informed that Capt. C. F. G. Knowles has been appointed to succeed me as district captain. Before relinquishing command of the district, I wish to express my entire satisfaction of the conduct and ability of the officers and men of the Coastguard in the performance of their several duties, and at the efficient manner in which the arduous duties of the tenders on the West Coast of Ireland have been performed during the period of my command."

The Royal National Lifeboat Institution has received the sum of £19 10s., as a contribution towards a new lifeboat, from the officers and crew of H.M.S. Eclipse, recently paid off at Sheerness, and also £4 7s. 8d., the proceeds of an offertory on board H.M.S. Tourmaline in the East Indies. It is hoped that other ships in commission will follow this good example, and assist a most deserving institution in finding the means whereby to save life from shipwreck.

Reviews.

The English Illustrated Magazine. (Macmillan and Co.)—When this remarkable addition to our light literature was first announced, there were many who smiled sceptically at the idea that even a portion of what was promised could be performed. However, the ordeal is past, and the publishers may well rest satisfied with the result. The marvel of light literature has challenged public opinion, and has got a verdict. A highly-executed engraving of Alma Tadema's well-known painting, "Shy," an engraving of "Lady Lilith," the water-colour painting by D. G. Rossetti, and a splendid example of Algernon Swinburne, "Les Casquettes," form but a portion of the attractions that are offered in this the first number of Macmillan's English Illustrated Magazine.

Miss Braddon's next issue of her "Misletoe Bough" will consist of one complete story, written by herself, and illustrated throughout by Mr. Henry French. It will be entitled "Under the Red Flag," and it will appear early in November.

Messrs. J. and R. Maxwell have in the press a new social novel, by a new writer of great political and social importance. The new work, "Thy Name is Truth," will be published almost immediately.

NAVAL NOTES.

The desirability of strengthening the British Squadron on the Australian station, and of giving command to an admiral, has been reviewed, representations in favour of the change having, it is stated, been made to the Admiralty by the Colonial Government.

At the quarterly meeting of the Directors of the Naval Medical Supplemental Fund, held on the 9th inst., Sir W. Smart, K.C.B., M.D., Inspector-General, in the chair, the sum of £68 was distributed among the several applicants.

Capt. Leclerc has been appointed Naval Attaché to the French Embassy in London, in the room of Capt. Dufresne de la Chauvinière.

There is at present an increased activity in all the dockyards of the Italian Navy. In order to have the two large ships, Italia and Lepanto, ready as soon as possible, it has been determined that the Italia shall be covered with armour-plates at Naples, so that all the resources of the Spezia Dockyard will be available for the Lepanto. The armour-plate will be the compound sort, supplied by Messrs. Cammell and Brown. Between next spring and summer three more large ships are likely to be launched,—the D'Oria, Lauria, and Morosini. The Navy Department has, in addition to this, prepared the designs for seven new ships, similiar to the Italia, a torpedo ram, and four small high-speed cruisers. Eighteen larger torpedo-boats have also been ordered. They must be able to navigate the high sea, have a speed of 21 miles an hour, and carry coal enough to be able to steam about 2,000 miles.

The Foreign Office having applied to the Admiralty for the services of Capt. C. E. Foot, R.N., that officer has been granted leave for two years, and is to be appointed Consul in the Nyassa and other lake districts, for the purpose of suppressing the slave trade, and developing civilisation and commerce in Central Africa. Com. C. E. Gissing, R.N., will be appointed Vice-Consul, to act as Capt. Foot's assistant. Capt. Foot was lately in charge of the Ruby, on the East Indies station. Com. Gissing was promoted to his present rank March 9, 1881, and has just relinquished his post as second-in-command of the Shannon, Coastguard ship at Greenock, to enable him to accept the above-mentioned appointment.

The building of a new jetty, to cost £20,000, is to be commenced at Portsmouth Dockyard next week. The work will occupy two years.

The report on Admiralty Surveys for last year has been issued from the Hydrographer's Office at the Admiralty. It appears that eight ships of war were employed on surveying duties on foreign stations during the year. They were the Alert, in the Indian Ocean; the Fawn, in the Red Sea, Delagoa Bay, and Madagascar; the Flying Fish, on the South Coast of Japan and West Coast of Corea; the Magpie, on the East Coast of Japan and South Coast of Corea; the Sylvia, at Rio de la Plata and the Straits of Magellan; the Renard, at the Fiji Islands; the Sparrowhawk, at the West Indies (Bahamas); and the Lark, at the Solomon Islands. Besides these, several hired steam and sailing vessels were employed in different parts of the world. The work performed by the Flying Fish and the Magpie on the Coast of Corea was of a novel and important character, and some useful discoveries of natural ports and anchorages were made by them.

The Admiralty have placed at their disposal, by the death of Retired Com. T. Lavington, a Naval pension of £50 per annum.

Frank Singleton, petty officer 1st class, and Robert Purdie, acting chief quartermaster, of the Cambridge; Thomas Hemshole, captain of the foretop, of the Royal Adelaide; T. W. Harris, C. Seagrave, John Cohen, and B. M. Greenwood, boatmen, E. W. There is much talk that the Humber is on its way, that the Admiralty are seeking to charter transports, that, in fact, we are in a very short time to be left without any of the familiar Redcoats, and within a still less period to be left with a merely nominal garrison. The Israelites themselves never left Egypt with more hearty satisfaction, and the beaming smiles with which you are told, " We shall soon see the last of you," if not flattering to your hospitality, is so perfectly natural and spontaneous, that it is impossible to resist congratulating them. But Egypt is not "glad at their departure," for if they have spoiled the Egyptians, it has been by hospitality only. There are few of them who have not made some friends, many of them who will be much missed, and all of them kindly remembered, but I prefer deferring the epitaph until they have left the country.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Moss litter, in lieu of straw, for further experimental trials, has been issued to the 2nd Dragoon Guards and Royal Engineer troops. These trials will extend over a period of three months. This litter does not find much favour in the stables of the Royal Artillery, where it has been in use for some time. It is said to be injurious to the horses' hoofs, and that the animals suffer in condition. Other faults are also found with it. It is certainly much cheaper than straw, and a great saving would be effected if it could be generally adopted in the service.

The Secretaries of the different Amusement Committees met at the Officers' Club on Monday last, Sir Frederick FitzWygram, Bart., in the chair, to take into consideration a programme for the winter. Sir Frederick is thoroughly in earnest in these matters, and already preparations are being made for amateur theatricals at the Club House at an early date, the Officers' Music Society is about to be resuscitated, and clay-pigeon shooting and golf clubs have been formed. The approaching winter season at the Camp promises to be as cheerful as last season was dull. In some regiments, not the slightest effort is made during the winter months to organise readings and concerts, in marked contrast to others, where these entertainments take place weekly in the recreation or schoolrooms. Commanding officers should be empowered to draw on canteen funds to the extent necessary to defray the expenses of these entertainments.

The following officers have been ordered to join the Garrison Instruction Class at this station on the 1st prox. :—Major Douglas, 92nd Highlanders; Captains Tillotson, R.H.A. ; Heathcote and Cooke, Cameronians; Newington, 31st ; Armitage, 13th Hussars ; Kelham, 74th ; Roberts, 72nd ; Courtenay, 20th Hussars ; Rowley, 1st Battalion, 23rd ; Bayley, 92nd Highlanders ; and Stanley, 64th ; Lieutenants Preston and Hibbert, 2nd Dragoon Guards ; Rankin, Cameronians ; Chawner and Symonds, 2nd Battalion, 18th ; Thomas, 31st ; Henderson and Leslie, 84th ; Gordon, 13th Hussars ; Hume, 72nd ; Hawtayne, 64th ; and Cox, 1st Battalion, 10th.

Twelve medical officers will join the Depôt Army Hospital Corps on the 1st prox., for a course of drill.

Probationary Veterinary Surgeons Pottinger and Raymond have been ordered to Aldershot for duty.

The Rev. T. F. Falkner, Church of England Chaplain to the Forces, will embark for Bermuda on the 17th inst.

The Rev. J. M. Millar, Presbyterian Chaplain to the Forces, proceeded to London on Wednesday, there to be stationed.

The Rev. W. M'Kay has been appointed Probationary Presbyterian Chaplain to the Forces, at Aldershot, from the 10th inst.

The following extract from a letter from the D.A.G. to the Forces, dated Portsmouth, 10th inst., addressed to Sir Frederick FitzWygram, Bart., commanding, was promulgated in Division Orders on Thursday :—" I am directed by the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief to convey to you, and all ranks serving under your command, his Royal Highness's entire satisfaction at the general appearance and drill of the Aldershot Division at his inspection yesterday."

Surgeon-Major C. McD. Cuffe, C.B., has assumed medical charge of the 3rd Brigade, and Surgeon-Major Harris medical charge of the 2nd Brigade.

The 39th Dorsetshire Regiment will move from the South Camp on Wednesday next to the East Infantry Barracks, and there occupy quarters, in succession to the 84th Regiment. On the 17th inst., the 39th will be transferred from the 1st to the 2nd Brigade.

THE INSPECTION OF THE ALDERSHOT DIVISION.

[FROM A GENERAL OFFICER.]

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge made his October inspection of the Aldershot Division on Tuesday in the Long Valley. According to the day's "state," the Division on paper numbered over 10,000 men ; the total strength in men on the ground was 5,653 of all ranks, a little more than half ! When it is borne in mind that for this inspection every officer and man who can by any possibility be brought on parade is present on the ground, the weakness to which the Army has been reduced by War-Office mismanagement is made manifest to the most obtuse understanding. On this occasion, the recruits of all the regiments were paraded without arms for inspection. There were plenty of them, and a sorry lot most of them looked, with the exception of the cavalry. The average number of infantry recruits standing behind each battalion seemed to be about 100. Of this number, quite one-third were weedy striplings, utterly unfit to carry a rifle and valise through a campaign. The large majority of these lads were evidently the waifs and strays of cities and towns ; there was little sign of the country about them. There were 44 guns, one brigade of Cavalry, and three brigades of Infantry, if " brigade " can be used for such weak bodies. In the slow march-past, the horse and field batteries looked well, though it was noticed that a good many of the horses of the field batteries were very poor and under-bred. Many of the drivers were evidently not only small, but deficient in power. The helmet with buttons has certainly not improved the martial appearance of the field batteries. The Cavalry brigade consisted of the "Bays," 3rd and 15th Hussars. This brigade, taken all round, was in excellent form, and well over the average of Continental cavalry. The Bays and 15th Hussars are excellent specimens of their class of Cavalry, and did full justice to their leaders. The 3rd Hussars were very weak in numbers, but fully up to Hussar work, on their light and wiry Hungarian horses. The 1st Infantry Brigade consisted of the 39th, 85th, and 26th Scotch Rifles. In describing the Infantry regiments, we should mention that everybody at Aldershot has quite given up the hopeless and most unpopular Territorial titles, which are spoken of with the utmost disgust by all ranks, from generals to privates. There seems, indeed, to be a universal pleasure in not remembering the " Muddesex " titles. It is high time that this folly was given up, before worse comes of it. In the 1st Brigade, the old 39th led off, in white facings, but carrying their war-worn green standards, which seemed almost to protest against being territorialised out of their ancient renown. The 85th Regiment followed, and the Scotch Rifles closed the martial array. The 26th were very weak in numbers, but smart and fit in appearance. The three battalions made a very weak brigade. The 2nd Brigade, which was the strongest on the ground, consisted of the 18th, 84th, and 31st Regiments. The 18th and 31st have not long returned from foreign service, and the 84th are filled up for Bermuda, therefore this brigade turned out pretty well ; but it was clear that the ranks were full of half-drilled men, got together for the occasion, to swell numbers. In this brigade the 31st Regiment carried off the palm for smartness. The 3rd Brigade—God save the mark !—consisted of the 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade and two strong companies of the 87th Fusiliers, who were left behind on the embarkation of the regiment lately for India, being either too old or young for India to accept them, as the Indian Government protests vehemently and steadily against being saddled with the enormous expense of the Territorial system. This brigade was a sorry sight to see. The Rifles marched by in a devil-may-care sort of way, with a look of protest against the sad state of four companies to which they were reduced. They were followed by the scratch lot of the 87th, about 200 men, who looked cold and unhappy at having lost their regiment, and being commanded by Rifle officers. They did their best, however, for this Aldershot Division—this First Corps d'Armée—the first for foreign service and embarkation for war ! Miserable results of red-hot reform ! The soldiers were glad to see the " Duke " looking so well after his visit to Germany, though people fancied he looked sad ; and no wonder, if he was contrasting the parade before him with the corps d'armée which he had just seen in the field near Homburg. We hope he may be long spared to swear in his good-natured way at the British soldier, and to warm up the red-hot reformers.

MILITARY PRISONS.

The report of Col. Sir E. F. Du Cane, K.C.B., R.E., the Inspector-General of Military Prisons, on the discipline and management of those establishments, shows that the ten military prisons in Great Britain and Ireland afford a total accommodation for 1,544 prisoners, the largest being at Brixton, which has been substituted as a place of confinement for military prisoners for Millbank. The number of sentences by courts-martial for the year ending 1882 was 8,332, being 9·2 per cent. on the average strength of the Army at home, and the number of minor punishments by commanding officers was 142,617, being 158·3 per cent. These figures show a marked diminution in the number of military offences since 1868, when the number of sentences by courts-martial was 14·7 per cent., the number of minor punishments being 177·4 per cent. of the home strength. Of the crimes for which courts-martial sentences of imprisonment for periods beyond 30 days were inflicted, desertion figures for 1,163, drunkenness for 874, insubordination for 818, absence without leave for 676, breaking out of barracks for 490, and disgraceful conduct for 303. At the end of the year 1882 there were 257 soldiers sentenced to imprisonment by courts-martial undergoing imprisonment in local civil prisons in England and Wales. The men undergoing sentence of imprisonment in these civil gaols had been convicted of crimes which were considered to be of such a nature as not to entitle them to the benefits of the classification in Section 153 of the Army Act, 1881, which enjoins that, " A clear difference should be made between the treatment of prisoners convicted of breaches of discipline and the treatment of prisoners convicted of offences of an immoral, dishonest, shameful, or criminal character.'' Of this number, 186 were convicted of violence to superior officers, 43 of insubordination without violence, 110 of fraudulent enlistment, and 24 of desertion. It is a remarkable fact that one-half of the military offenders are men of two years' service or under. The Inspector-General states that the provision of industrial occupation is much to be desired, both from the disciplinary point of view and because of its better effect on the prisoner's mind and faculties, and, as it also is in other respects an advantage to the public, it is hoped that other departments of the War Office may give such assistance as they are able, and thus make profitable use of the large amount of labour always at their disposal. Consideration has been given to the importance of making some provision for assisting, on release, such prisoners as are ordered to be discharged from the Army at the expiration of their sentences, by helping them to procure employment, and by granting them a small sum of money to enable them to subsist while endeavouring to obtain it, and thus to diminish the risks of their falling into criminal courses or re-enlisting fraudulently. It will be easily understood that this is a matter which must be dealt with with great care and discretion. Prisoners on their discharge are very prone to make bad use of any money they may become possessed of, and such a gift is, therefore, worse than useless, if means are not taken to insure its appropriation to its legitimate objects. But besides this, it is, of course, not desirable that a discharge for bad conduct shall have the appearance of being actually a pecuniary benefit to the soldier concerned. It is hoped that satisfactory arrangements for the proper-appropriation of any gratuity granted for this purpose may be made with the various societies for the aid of prisoners on their discharge, or with clergymen or other responsible persons who would be willing to interest themselves in these men, so that the desired object may be obtained without risk of incurring the disadvantages adverted to. The number of men discharged from the Army for bad conduct in each year since 1868 is as follows :—In 1869, 2,470 ; in 1870, 1,616 ; in 1871, 1,032 ; in 1872, 1,694 ; in 1873, 2,065 ; in 1874, 1,648 ; in 1875, 1,667 ; in 1876, 1,682 ; in 1877, 2,003 ; in 1878, 1,811 ; in 1879, 2,091 ; in 1880, 1,826 ; in 1881, 1,518 ; and in 1882, 1,294. There are also military prisons at Barbados, Bermuda, Gibraltar, Halifax, and Malta, affording a total accommodation for 415 prisoners.

" A Taxpayer " writes :—" Allow me to point out one of the ways the money is going in our skeleton of an Army,—bringing a regiment, which is quartered at a station where there is no rifle-range, a second time to a station where there is one, to go through the second part of its annual course of musketry, according to General Order, dated All Fools' Day. Whether it is worth the expense of moving troops by rail, 20, 25, or 30 miles to and from a station, one week for the first part of the course, and the same distance over again next week, to fire twenty rounds, I leave to the judgment of any man with a few grains of common-sense."

4th Dragoon Guards. He was the eldest son of the late Mr. W. J. Hamilton, F.R.S., of Holyfield Hall (who was M.P. for Newport, in the Isle of Wight, from 1841 till 1847). He was born in 1833, and was appointed an ensign and lieut. by purchase in 1853, being promoted to the rank of lieut. and capt. in June, 1855. As a subaltern he served with the 3rd Batn. in the Crimea in 1854, and though wounded at the battle of Alma, at the outset of the campaign, he continued with his regt., and took part in the subsequent battles of Balaclava and Inkerman, also doing duty in the trenches at the siege and fall of Sebastopol (medal with four clasps, Sardinian and Turkish medals and the Fifth Class of the Medjidie). The 3rd Batn. returned from the Crimea in June, 1856, and in due course Lieut. Hamilton was promoted to be capt. and lieut.-col., which commission he obtained, by purchase, in July, 1861. In 1867, on the death of his father, he retired from the service, and was soon after appointed a magistrate for the county of Essex.

34th Border Regiment. Major and Pymr. Elliott is under orders to return home from India.

59th Nottinghamshire Regiment. The "5 and 9," Lilywhite's Gazette, has the following :—"Letter F Company, with Capt. Lucas and Lieut. Twynam, proceeded to Gravesend on Sept. 1, for their annual course. They were joined by the recruits of the company, who, under Lieut. Medhurst, had just completed their recruits' course. We are pleased to see that Capt. Lucas, whilst passing his examination for promotion to the rank of major, obtained a special certificate for proficiency in field fortification. Lieut. Muntz proceeded to Edinburgh on Sept. 1, for four months, for the purpose of going through a garrison course. Major Stoyte has been granted leave of absence for four months, to enable him to travel in Canada, and has already started. On the evening of Sept. 11 Col. Lawson and the officers gave a dance in the mess-room. It was intended originally to be a small one for dancing people only, but, as usual in such cases, it was found impossible to keep the numbers down, and altogether over two hundred invitations were issued. Capt. Little undertook the floor and put it into excellent order for dancing, all the other arrangements being made by the mess committee, viz., Capt. Downes and Mr. Goff. A tent was pitched close under the mess-room windows for the string band, who played a capital programme of 18 dances, the music sounding soft and clear. A small room off the mess-room, and a large tent pitched in front of the entrance hall dimly lighted by Chinese lanterns, served for quiet resting-places between the dances. The ante-room made a third, and was, besides, provided with whist tables, which, by-the-bye, were not used, and finally the billiard-room came in usefully for refreshments. The rain found its way into one corner of the large tent, but no one seemed to mind this little inconvenience. No 'white lilies' being forthcoming at this time of the year, the officers and ladies of the regiment wore small rosettes of the regimental colour—white and red. Dancing began soon after 9, and was kept up till nearly 2, when the band played 'God save the Queen' as a finish to a most successful dance."

Rifle Brigade, and 2nd West India Regt.; regimental districts, — Clonmell, Berwick-upon-Tweed, Devizes, Sunderland, and Galway; total, 35 vacancies. "Regimental Paymaster" writes :—"On behalf of the Department to which I belong, I beg to thank you for the paragraph which appeared in your last week's issue, on the subject of the inspection of our offices by War-Office clerks, instead of by the seniors in our own corps. It is, as you say, one of the chief amongst the minor grievances of which we complain; and as it requires neither a Royal Warrant nor the expenditure of a single farthing of public money to remedy, we are hoping that Lord Hartington, on his return to London, will find time to order its redress. What would our combatant brethren think, if a Volunteer colonel, however efficient, were sent to make the annual inspection of a regiment, to the exclusion of the General commanding the district? and yet this is exactly what is being done in the Pay Department. We have now attached to most Generals' commands an officer, specially selected, holding the rank of chief paymaster; and it is obvious that in all ordinary cases it is on this officer the duty of periodical inspections should devolve, otherwise the rank is a misnomer, and the administrative duties which on appointment they were informed they would be called upon to exercise are non-existent. At the same time, I would beg to point out that the article in the Royal Warrant you quote does not direct that these inspections are to be performed by chief paymasters—I wish it did—but merely limits the allowance to an officer when detailed for this duty to 10s. a day. Whether a War Office clerk gets more or less than this sum, I am not in a position to say."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

11th Middlesex Rifles. Respecting Col. Gore-Browne, whose resignation of the command we notified in our issue of the 29th ult., it may not be uninteresting to give a few particulars of his military services, and his conduct as a commanding officer of Volunteers. He was gazetted ensign, Dec. 16, 1853; lieut., Sept. 1, 1854; and capt., Jan. 28, 1862. He served in the 82nd, 25th, and 49th Regts., and was adjt. in the 82nd and 25th, being made adjt. after only two years' service, and getting the credit of being one of the smartest adjutants in the Army. He served in the Crimean War, and afterwards in India during the Mutiny, for which he received the usual medals. At Cawnpore, he distinguished himself by bringing, although then only a lieutenant, his regiment successfully out of action, a feat, however, for which he never received either reward or even due recognition. After leaving the Army, he became major of the 5th Hants R.V., at Portsmouth, and on June 14, 1876, obtained the lieut.-colonelcy of the 11th (then the 20th) Middlesex Rifles, in which he soon effected a wonderful improvement in drill and efficiency. For some months previous to his taking over the command, the regiment had been commanded by an ex-Regular officer, under whom it had not made progress; but Col. Gore-Browne at once introduced that spirit of discipline for which he had been noted during his Line career, and under him the regiment rapidly changed its character, and became one of the smartest in the Metropolis. If he did not approve of the usual Easter Monday review of Volunteers, and declined to participate in them, it was only because he thought they did not properly instruct Volunteers, and that training, for even a few days only, at a military camp with the Regulars would be more beneficial. Therefore, he took his regiment every Easter to Aldershot, and there let his men see and feel and learn the real nature of military work and duty.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

An Examination for Cadetships at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, will take place at the University of London, Burlington Gardens, W., by permission of the Senate, on Nov. 26, 1883, and following days; the first day being devoted to the medical examination of the candidates. The subjects of examination, the limits of age, and other conditions, will be those specified in the Regulations issued with G. O. 113 of 1880. There will be 112 cadetships to be awarded, of which 90 will be for infantry, 15 for cavalry, and seven for West India Regiments. Intending competitors must inform the Military Secretary before the date fixed for examination whether they elect to be considered candidates for cavalry or infantry. If within the prescribed limits of age, they may return their names (1), for both infantry and cavalry, expressing a preference for one or the other; (2), for infantry only; (3), for cavalry only. Cadetships will be given to successful candidates, subject to the above limitation of numbers, in order of merit, in accordance with the election they have made. In the case of (1), viz., those who have returned their names for both infantry and cavalry, they will be taken for infantry or cavalry, in accordance with the preference expressed by them. The number of cadetships to be awarded in each arm will not be exceeded, and candidates must distinctly understand that the election made by them before the examination will be absolutely final, and that it cannot be altered after the result of the examination has been declared. The seven West Indian cadetships will be awarded in the same manner as heretofore. Twelve cadetships, in addition to the above, will also be offered for competition by University candidates, as provided for in the regulations. The successful competitors will be required to join the Royal Military College, as gentlemen cadets, on February 12, 1884. Applications cannot be received unless made in strict accordance with the regulations, October 15 next being the latest date on which applications can be received. Candidates who have been previously examined should forward with their applications a certificate of good conduct for the intervening period. If intending competitors wish for any further information relative to the examination, they should apply, by letter, to the "Military Secretary," Horse Guards, War Office, S.W.

War Office, October 4, 1883.

ARMY NOTES.

A grant of £350 has been made by the National Aid Society for the Relief of the Wounded in War to Mr. Cantlie, of Charing Cross Hospital, for the equipment of an ambulance company, formed of the students of the Charing Cross Medical School. The sum is to be expended in the provision of the necessary ambulance material, and the committee, in making the grant, pronounce this training of medical students in field hospital work as a pastime to be of the greatest importance in its bearing on the Regular and Volunteer services.

A Royal Warrant has recently been issued making an alteration in the rewards to recruiters for recruits passed into the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, and in future such reward for each recruit raised by the recruiter and finally approved for either of those regiments will be 5s. This, however, will be liable to a reduction of 1s. when the recruit belongs to the Militia and enlists during the period of his preliminary drill, drill on enlistment, or during his first period of training.

With regard to recruiting in future, when orders are issued to enlist tailors, they may be enlisted two inches below the standard height, and two inches under the chest measurement fixed for their respective corps. Such men will be required to obtain a certificate of trade proficiency in all cases where there is a regimental tailors' shop at the station.

The Duke of Cambridge made his annual inspection of the troops stationed at Chatham on Monday. His Royal Highness arrived at Chatham about half-past 11, being accompanied by Major-Gen. Sir A. Clarke, Inspector-General of Fortifications; Col. Sir J. Stokes, Deputy-Adjutant-General, R.E.; Major-Gen. Hay, R.A., Deputy-Adjutant-General, R.A.; Col. Hale, A.D.C., and others. The party were received at the railway-station by Major-Gen. the Hon. R. Monck, commandant of the garrison, and the divisional staff, a Royal salute being fired from Fort Amherst. The Duke proceeded direct to the Great Lines, where the troops had been drawn up. The Duke having been received with a general salute, made an inspection of the troops, after which his Royal Highness took up his position at the saluting flag, when the troops marched past, the marching of the Marines being particularly good. Each corps was then put through the manual and firing exercises, the manner in which the Marines went through the latter eliciting the remark of "Well done, indeed!" from the Duke. The troops were afterwards put through a variety of brigade movements by Gen. Monck. The Duke subsequently inspected the recruits, and having lunched with Gen. Monck, returned to London shortly after 3 o'clock.

The Standard says:—"Col. the Hon. E. G. Curzon, half-pay, late of the 52nd Foot, is appointed to serve on the Staff of the Army at Shorncliffe, in succession to Col. J. Davis, half-pay, promoted Major-Gen."

It is stated that a marble memorial bust of the late Gen. Sir George Pomeroy Colley, placed on a bracket, bearing an inscription describing his services, has been fixed in the hall of the Staff College, Farnborough. The sculptor is Mr. H. P. MacCarthy.

A special committee has been ordered to assemble for the purpose of investigating the cause of the recent explosion at the rocket store in the Royal Arsenal at Woolwich, and the following officers have been selected as members:—Major-Gen. H. A. Smyth, R.A., commanding the Woolwich district, to be president; Sir F. A. Abel, K.C.B., chemist to the War Department; Col. W. A. Fox-Strangways, R.A., Commandant of the School of Gunnery, Shoeburyness, and Superintendent of Experiments; Lieut.-Col. H. D. Crogin, R.E., Inspector of Works, Royal Arsenal, Woolwich; and Lieut.-Col. S. J. Nicholson, R.A., Assistant-Director of Artillery and Stores, as secretary. This inquiry is in addition to the departmental investigation already announced to inquire into the circumstances attending the unfortunate catastrophe. This inquiry will, it is believed, elucidate some new facts as to the contents of the store which exploded. As to the future, it is satisfactory to learn already that a determination has been arrived at which will prevent the possibility of another such occurrence in the vicinity of Woolwich, as large stores of rockets will never again be kept in a position in which they can be capable of so much mischief; and that the operations of cleaning and painting the rockets will in future be carried out as far as possible from the store.

H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge held his annual inspection of the troops in Portsmouth on Wednesday morning. The troops comprised all arms, and were drawn from Eastney, Hilsea, Gosport, and Forton, as well as from the barracks within the town. Owing, however, to the garrison being a couple of regiments below its complement and the depleted state of some of the battalions, the field strength of the muster was under 4,000. After a general salute, his Royal Highness instituted a careful inspection of the troops. On the conclusion of the inspection the whole of the troops marched past, after which a number of movements were performed. The parade lasted two hours. After lunching at Government House the Duke and party proceeded to Spithead in the Sprightly to inspect the forts

The Standard says:—"With reference to the cases of men discharged from military prisons, mentioned in the report of the Inspector-General of Military Prisons, recently published, we are informed that an arrangement has been made between the War Office and the Royal Society for the Assistance of Discharged Prisoners, under which that society has undertaken to aid a large percentage of such cases. This work is in addition to that which the society has carried on for the last 26 years, during which period it has aided 13,675 cases of men and women on their discharge from convict prisons. Col. Herbert G. Deedes, Assistant-Under-Secretary of State for War, has consented to join the committee of the Society."

Referring to the new orders about cavalry uniform for Bombay, the Bombay Gazette says:—"The disappearance of the familiar—and very handsome—blue and silver from the Bombay Cavalry will certainly be regretted, though the new uniform seems well adapted for the cavalry as a body. Let us hope that the change will be final. One of the commonest and most reasonable complaints amongst officers now-a-days seems to be that they are constantly being put to the expense of getting new uniform. The light blue and silver is now to be replaced by dark green and gold, with red kummerbund; helmets are to be worn, but for regimental parades they are to be covered with the native officers' loongee. The whole thing looks well on paper, but we shall doubtless hear how it answers when it comes to be taken into wear. It seems that all the regiments of Bombay Cavalry are now to be dressed exactly alike, and in this case the somewhat gorgeous trappings of the Sind Horse will disappear from the scene."

Military monuments or tombstones will not in future be fixed without the sanction of the General Officer commanding the district, to whom the commanding Royal Engineer will report as to the appropriateness of the design, after conferring with the senior Chaplain of the Forces with regard to the inscription, any quotation in which should as a rule be limited to a correctly cited text of Scripture. The monuments and tombstones will not, without special sanction, be repaired at the public expense, and if suffered to fall into decay will be liable to removal.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1883.

IT will be within the recollection of some of our readers that a special Army Circular was issued by the War Office on May 18 last, amending in certain respects the provisions of the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882, governing the Pay, &c., of officers. Many of these referred to the Pay Department, the result of the assembly of a War-Office Committee last December, which was occasioned by the paucity of Probationers, and the wide-spread feeling of discontent throughout the Department. To meet the dearth of candidates, the authorities extended the Regulations for admission to Subalterns in the following terms:—"Appointments in the Army Pay Department shall be conferred upon officers of our Regular Forces under the age of 40 years, who shall have not less than ten years' commissioned service in the regimental rank of Lieutenant or Captain." Considering the certainty to many that in a few years they must be retired at 40 years of age on £200 a year, the authorities naturally anticipated that the forty vacancies then existing in the establishment of the Pay Department would be quickly sought after by aspiring Subalterns. From official sources, however, we find that the number of candidates wanted is practically the same as six months ago, as the annexed figures demonstrate:—In May: Number of Paymasters of all ranks, including those serving under former Warrants, 284; wanting, to complete establishment, 40. In June: Number of Paymasters, &c., 289; wanting, 35. In July: Number, 286; wanting, 38. In August: Number, 285; wanting, 39. In September: Number, 285; wanting, 39. This month: Number, 285; wanting, 39. Obviously, the reason for all this is that the concessions granted to the Department last May were not sufficient. In an article which appeared in these columns on July 14 last, the grievances under which the Pay Department still labours were exhaustively treated. Briefly stated, the most urgent are as follows:—1. Staff Paymasters, after five years' service as such, to have the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel. 2. All Paymasters to have the honorary rank of Major after five, or at the utmost seven, years' service in that grade. 3. All allowances to be optional. 4. Forage for Chief Paymasters. 5. A corps of clerks, under the complete control of the officers of the Department. 6. A charter for honours, so that the services of officers in the field may be similarly recognised to those in other Departments. And last, not least (7), an officer of the Department in Pall Mall, to superintend the personnel, under the Accountant-General. We commend these points to the consideration of the Secretary of State for War. It is evident that, with a constantly recurring deficit in numbers of over 12 per cent., the authorities must remove the existing causes of complaint, before they can expect to obtain the services of competent officers for the irksome and responsible duties of finance. We take up the case of the Department in the interests of the public service, for it is clear that so long as it remains as at present, under civil control, to hope for any improvement in its condition is to hope for something which is altogether outside the region of possibility. The very fact of such an absurdity being tolerated as a Military Department—for if the Department is not Military, what is it?—being controlled by a War-Office official, is convincing proof, if such were needed, of the rottenness of our present system of Army administration.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who, as already announced, leave for Bombay by the steamer of November 2, will be accompanied to India by Major Viscount Downe, 2nd Life Guards, Lady Downe, and Captain Sir Maurice Fitzgerald, Bart., the Knight of Kerry filling the duties of equerry to his Royal Highness. At Brindisi the royal party will be joined by General Sir Arthur Conynghame, G.C.B., who is proceeding to India with his daughter, on a visit to his brother-in-law, Lieutenant-General the Hon. Arthur Hardinge, C.B., commanding the forces at Bombay. Lieutenant-General Sir Robert Bright, who has completed his term of command of the Meerut division, leaves Bombay for England by the steamer of the 26th. The Meerut district, which will be under the military command of the Duke of Connaught, has as its civil commissioner Mr. Elliot Colvin, B.C.S., a brother of the new Indian Finance Minister.

A modification has been made in the pattern of experimental rifle and ammunition issued in 1882, and a number of rifles so modified have been prepared for reissue experimentally. The modifications are as follows:—(1.) The barrels of one-half the rifles have been rifled in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee assembled at the War Office on January 24, 1883; in the remainder, the rifling is as before. (2.) The back-sight has been put back to the old position; it has a wind-gauge attached, and is altered in pattern from the service-sight. (3.) The hand-guard is altered in pattern, and attached to the barrel in a different manner; this has become necessary, on account of the altered position of the back-sight. (4.) The lower band has been made solid, and is held in position by a spring in the fore end. (5.) The long-range sights are made in accordance with the latest pattern of those submitted for trial. (6.) A safety-bolt has been added. (7.) The whole of the rifles are fitted with "quick loaders." (8.) The form of cartridge-case has been altered so as to reduce the length of cartridge, and thereby facilitate loading. The new weapon is 6 oz. heavier than the service rifle. The breech action is the same in principle as the present service action. A hand-guard of wood has been fitted to the barrel to prevent inconvenience in holding the rifle from the heating of the barrel. The leaf of the back-sight is graduated and marked on the left side in ranges from 500 to 1,500 yards. The long lines on the right side divide these ranges into half-hundreds, and the short lines into quarters, so that there is a line for every 25, 50, and 75 yards between the hundreds, from 500 and upwards. A wind-gauge is attached to a slide, and moves in either direction. The object of this sight is to give the soldier greater facilities for aiming. It is thought that the smaller graduations on the leaf will enable a soldier to correct his elevations more readily; while the wind-gauge will enable him to make allowance for wind and deflection, without laying off the target. A back-sight for long-range shooting has been fixed to the whole of the experimental barrels. A long-range front-sight, from 1,000 to 2,000 yards, is issued with each rifle. It is secured to the upper band by a spring. Two "quick loaders" will be issued with each rifle; when not required, they will be carried in two pockets suspended to the waist-belt; when required for use, they are hung on the side of the body of the action. The "quick loader" holds six cartridges, acted on by a zigzag spring, which always presses one cartridge to the opening, the head of the cartridge being forced out of the opening, in a convenient position for the soldier to load, by the pressure of the spring forcing the bullet up the inclined plane. This rifle, with the ammunition issued with it, has a muzzle velocity of 1,570 feet per second. It has a penetrative power which will take a bullet through a ¼-in. iron plate at 200 yards. The highest point of the trajectory at 400 yards is under 4 feet; at 500 yards is 6·704 feet; and at 1,000 yards it is 39 feet. The figure of merit at 500 yards averages ·3 foot, and at 1,000 yards ·95 foot. A number of these rifles will be sent to the principal military stations at an early date, for exhaustive experimental trials, and report. Great things are expected from the weapon, and already excellent results have been attained at the proof practices which have been carried out.

We hear that it is in contemplation to form a School of Instruction for Mounted Infantry at an early date. Should this scheme be matured, the experiment will probably be carried out at Aldershot, where there is a great variety of ground for training purposes. Prospects of still further attenuation of their slender commands by the withdrawal of more officers and men for special courses will scarcely be grateful and comforting news to commanding officers, at the present time.

The disappointment of Artillery officers at the postponement of expected reforms in their corps is being keenly felt and openly expressed. Nor can this be wondered at. They had been led to believe that a complete scheme of reform had been drawn up, and would take effect this year. Yet up to the present hour nothing has been done, and it is now said that the proposed measures have been indefinitely shelved. We are quite willing to agree with Lord Hartington that after the convulsions and contortions which the Army has lately gone through, what is chiefly wanted is rest. But Artillery reform stands on an entirely different footing to the wild proposals which emanated from Mr. Childers' fanciful brain. It is not a question of changing for the sake of change, but of removing certain glaring and monstrous anomalies, which, so long as they continue to exist, are prejudicial to the interests of the service. Mr. Childers carried his measures over the heads of the regimental officers of the Army, and against the wishes of nearly all those who were most qualified to advise him. In the Artillery, on the contrary, the regimental officers are unanimous in demanding reforms the expediency and justice of which are indisputable. Why are these reforms withheld? If the officials who should carry them out are in favour of action, why have they not the courage of their convictions? If they hesitate to move, why do they not make way for those who have no scruples about acting? These are questions which are being asked on all sides.

We are informed that Lieutenant-Colonel Chenevix Trench, Military Attaché at St. Petersburg, has forwarded to the War Minister his scheme for enabling deserving Pensioners and Army Reserve men to obtain regular employment in civil life. A few months ago, viz., in our issue of May 5, we drew the attention of our readers to the merits of the proposals made by Colonel Trench for attaining the above objects. The scheme which he advocates would entail no expenditure of public money, it could be tried at once tentatively on a small scale, and would, if only moderately successful, go far to remove or mitigate one of the great drawbacks of short service, and conduce largely to the popularity of the Army among the working-classes. A practical plan of this kind is, we think, at least worth a trial.

By the field-state of the Aldershot Division on Tuesday last, it appears that the paper strength was 9,277 men; of this number, there were on parade 5,653 officers and men. In the rank-and-file state are included the bandsmen of ten regiments, about 300 men; 530 men were in hospital, 10 per cent.; 1,781 men are returned as on other duty, and 173 on guard. There are returned under the head of casualties, 1,140 recruits; that is to say, every eighth man is a young, untrained, and undrilled lad. The average paper strength of the three cavalry regiments was 467 men and officers; their average strength on parade was 247 officers and men, about half. The average paper strength of the seven infantry battalions was 661 officers and men; the actual average on parade was 461. The Commander-in-Chief's inspection brings out every officer and man in the division who has a leg to stand on. Of the 5,653 men paraded before his Royal Highness who were able to pull through an easy show parade of six hours, a very large per-centage would be unfit for active service, and would be cast, if the division were ordered suddenly to embark for war. Until this state of things is entirely altered and corrected, the Army Reserve men must be necessarily pulled out and replaced in the ranks for every foreign war, however small or trumpery, to enable the Line battalions to take the field with safety. But this was not the contract made with the Reserve when first formed. They were only to be "called out in cases of imminent national danger." If the Reserve are now to be called out for everything, their pay must be doubled, as a natural sequence.

Looking at the list of War Ministers in France who have succeeded each other since the fall of the Empire, what do we find? In 1871, General Le Flô; in 1872, General de Cissey; in 1873, General du Barrail; in 1874, General de Cissey again; in 1875, General de Cissey, under another Administration; in 1876, General Berthaut; in 1877, General Berthaut, under another Administration; in 1878, General Borel; in 1879, General Gresley; in 1880, General Farre; in 1881, General Campenon; in 1882, General Billot; and on February 22, 1883, General Thibaudin succeeded to office, and great was the uproar which his appointment created—first, because he had broken his parole during the Franco-German War; second, because he was the only officer of his rank who could be found to carry out the iniquitous decree against the Princes of the House of Orleans. It was thought that, once the Orleans Princes had been deprived of their commissions, General Thibaudin would have been thrown overboard. But General Thibaudin, supported by a strong body of Radicals, refused to lend himself to this arrangement, and when he had to be got rid of the other day, it was necessary for all his colleagues to threaten resignation. As General Thibaudin, unlike the late Duke of Wellington, had not the pretension of carrying on the Government all alone, he was at last forced to resign, to the great mortification of the Revolutionary party, who have raised a terrible wail over the departed hero. The new occupant of the War Office served under Gambetta, and on the fall of that Minister was asked by M. de Freycinet to remain in office; this he declined. General Campenon was one of the very few officers who, in 1852, declined to accept the Empire. After the coup d'état, he took service in Tunis, where he organised the army of the Bey; however, he afterwards made his peace with the Empire, and served in Algeria and other foreign lands. He distinguished himself in China in more ways than one, and is said to have returned home with a goodly share of the spoil of that Summer Palace which had been pretty well gutted when it was burned by the English. It is said that when General Junot evacuated Portugal in 1808, after the convention of Cintra, that five vessels were freighted with his plunder. The loot which General Campenon brought home can hardly be compared to that, but still the sale of his curios is said to have extended over several days. General Campenon was wounded and made a prisoner at Metz, he bears a high reputation as an administrator, and seems to be popular with most moderate men. The Reds pronounce him to be a kind of military dictator.

It appears that General Thibaudin, the ex-War Minister in France, who carries with him in his retirement all the sympathies of the scum of Paris, behaved something like the unjust steward before relinquishing office. He made so many promotions and granted so many favours of an exceptional character when in extremis, that Rear-Admiral Peyron, who took over the War Office until the appointment of a new Minister, felt bound in honour to cancel them. General Thibaudin, too, shortly before he got into trouble, announced his intention of changing the Chief of the Staff in favour of a General more congenial to the Radicals than General Vuillemot. General Campenon, on resuming office, announced his intention of retaining the services of General Vuillemot.

The revised Musketry Regulations (G.O. 51, of 1883), specially issued on March 29 last, have undergone so many modifications and alterations since that date, that a reissue of new regulations on the whole subject has become necessary, and may be looked for at an early date.

Major-General Sir Evelyn Wood returns to Egypt in the course of the next few days, and will be accompanied by Lady Wood and family.

A correspondent writing to us from Cairo says:—"General Hicks Pasha left Khartoum for Duen, on the 28th, by steamer, the army having gone on before. The present staff of Hicks Pasha, at the commencement of the Kordofan Campaign, is as follows:—Colonel Farquhar, with Hicks Pasha; Colonel De Coetlogon, left at Khartoum; Lieutenant-Colonel Hon. J. Colborne, Cairo, invalided; Major Morton, on sick-leave in England; Major Evans, interpreter, with Hicks Pasha; Captain Forest Walker, on sick-leave in England. The other officers are all Germans or Austrians. Fighting is expected about half-way between Duen and Obeid. The enemy are said to be strong in cavalry."

Captain T. E. Stephenson, 56th Regiment, has taken up the duties of Local Inspector of Army Schools at Gibraltar, in addition to those of Garrison Instructor at that station.

Alexandra, Capt. Harry Rawson, C.B., flagship of Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay, K.C.B., was at Salonica up to Oct. 3, with the Monarch, Temeraire, Carysfort, Superb, Inflexible, Invincible, Helicon, and Cockatrice, and at Thaso on Oct. 9. The Superb and Inflexible would part company and proceed to Malta about Oct. 15 (mails to Malta). The Condor was at Malta, the Iris at Port Said, the Cygnet at Alexandria, the Falcon at Constantinople; the Decoy was cruising on coast of Italy, &c., and is due at Gibraltar about Nov. 2; the Cruiser was on a cruise of instruction, the Coquette on the coast of Tunis (mails to Malta), the Grappler at Gibraltar, and the Bittern was en route to Sierra Leone.

Amethyst, Capt. Harry Brent, was at Bahia on Oct. 5.

Boadicea, Capt. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Noel Salmon, V.C., Commander-in-Chief, was at Simon's Bay on Oct. 10. The Starling left Simon's Bay on Sept. 15, for St. Helena.

Cockchafer, Lieut. and Com. Groome, was in the River Min on Aug. 30, and would leave on Sept. 3 for Amoy.

Champion, Capt. Powlett, was at Penang on Sept. 2, and was to leave on Sept. 3 for Straits of Sunda.

Cruiser, Com. Darwall, arrived at Gibraltar on Tuesday.

Dart, Lieut.-Com. William U. Moore, surveying vessel on the Australian station, has had a boat's crew in charge of Mr. Nineham, boatswain, attacked by the natives of one of the islands on the N.E. coast. A seaman was dangerously wounded, and the boatswain was also hit by a spear.

Dwarf, Lieut.-Com. W. J. Moore, was paid off all standing at Portsmouth on Oct. 9, after having acted as a training ship in connection with the Royal Naval Volunteers. She will next be attached to the Penelope, guardship at Harwich, as a tender.

Espoir, Lieut. and Com. Gamble, was at Hong Kong up to Aug. 30.

Euryalus, Capt. Hastings, C.B., flagship of Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., was at Zanzibar on Sept. 12, when a correspondent wrote:—"We came from the Mauritius three days ago, remain here about a fortnight, and then go to Bombay or Colombo, and are to be at Calcutta early in December." She was at Zanzibar on Oct. 10, with the Briton, Tourmaline, and Osprey; the latter would remain on that part of the station. The Ranger left Zanzibar on Sept. 15 for Seychelles, to fetch mails for Squadron, and would return to Zanzibar. The Harrier was at Zanzibar, and would proceed to Australia when ready, calling at Mozambique and Perth. The Dragon was at Zanzibar. The Dryad left Tamatave on Sept. 3, to visit ports in North Madagascar; she would then visit ports to southward, take British subjects to Mauritius, arrive there about Sept. 21, coal, and then return to Tamatave. The Undine left Mozambique on Aug. 31 for Tamatave, and would return to Mozambique, whence she will be recalled to Zanzibar, prior to proceeding to Australia. The Arab was at Bombay, and would be ordered to Bay of Bengal. The Woodlark was at Bushire on Sept. 5, and would shortly proceed to Busreh. The Philomel was at Muscat on Aug. 27, and would remain on the southern part of the division.

Fly, Com. Hope, on return from Acheen, about Sept. 3, to Penang, would visit Straits of Sunda.

Frolic, Com. A. W. Moore, arrived at Madeira from Plymouth on Oct. 10, and would leave on Oct. 12.

Himalaya, Capt. Palliser, left Gibraltar on Oct. 8.

Jumna, Capt. Singleton, has arrived at Simon's Town, and leaves on Oct 13 for Bombay.

Minotaur, Capt. Fellowes, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir William M. Dowell, K.C.B., commanding the Channel Squadron, arrived in Portland Roads yesterday evening.

Moorhen, Lieut.-Com. Corfe, left Gibraltar on Oct. 8 for Devonport.

Opal, Capt. Arthur T. Brooke, senior officer on the West Coast of Africa, is cruising between St. Helena and Ascension. Very little of importance has transpired since the last mail left the West Coast. The ships on the station appear to have got a bit mixed, owing mostly to orders from the Commander-in-Chief at the Cape having arrived for the senior officer at Cape Coast Castle to take his squadron out fleet cruising after the Opal had left on a cruise of her own. The Bullfrog was at once sent to join the senior officer at Fernando Po, where the Algerine also turned up. The Starling, from the Cape, it was expected, would be fallen in with at St. Helena about the middle of September. The squadron would then proceed to Ascension, and return to Cape Coast Castle somewhere about the first week in November. The Flirt left Accra for Fernando Po on Aug. 19, and intended returning via the Oil Rivers in about a month, but the senior officer left orders at Fernando Po for her to go south to take the Algerine's place. She would most probably return to Accra first, with the box for the senior officer of the West Coast, as well as the box of the senior officer of the Bights Sub-division. The Flirt would be relieved on the South Sub-division by the Stork about the end of Sept. The Alecto was at Accra on Sept. 5, at the disposal of the Governor of the Gold Coast, who, it was expected, would proceed in her to Little Popo and other places in that neighbourhood, to ascertain what is there going on. The French have been trying hard to get a footing there of late, and should they succeed, their action will materially affect our interests on the West Coast, as they have already established themselves at Porto Novo. So far, however, the chiefs of Little Popo and other places in that neighbourhood deny having concluded any treaty whatever with those on board the French man-of-war which recently visited that part of the coast. To make certain, however, the Governor of the Gold Coast intended visiting the locality himself, but the disturbed state of Ashantee and the chance that the contending parties might cross our frontier had so far kept him at Accra. The weather has this season been delightfully cool and very pleasant on the West Coast.

Orontes, Capt. Andoe, passed Madeira on Oct. 7, en route to the Cape of Good Hope.

Sheldrake, Lieut.-Com. M. L. Bridger, arrived at Gibraltar on Monday last from Hong Kong, and left for Devonport on Oct. 9.

Sphinx, Com. Crawford Caffin, commissioned Oct. 9 for service in the Persian Gulf, has had her stability tested in the steam basin at Sheerness Dockyard, by the principal officials of the Chief Constructor's Department, with a satisfactory result. The armaments of the Sphinx, consisting of two heavy breech-loading guns and five guns of smaller calibre, have arrived from the Gun Wharf, Chatham, and will be at once mounted in their proper positions. The Sphinx will also be armed with three Nordenfelt machine-guns.

Swift, Com. Collins, was at Hong Kong up to Aug. 30.

Swiftsure, Capt. Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, was at Esquimault on Oct. 10.

Triton, Staff Com. Tizard, has returned to Sheerness upon the completion of her usual period of surveying service. The Triton has performed a considerable amount of work during the present summer. Soundings have been taken, and new charts prepared of the entrance to the River Thames,—a work that is rendered necessary at intervals owing to the shifting of the sands in the vicinity of the Nore light-vessel. The Triton has also been employed in taking soundings for the preparation of new charts of the north and north-west coasts of Scotland. She will lay up for the winter months, and will resume her surveying duties early in the spring.

Wye, Staff Com. A. W. Miller, will embark at Devonport the first week in November about 120 supernumeraries of all ratings to fill vacancies on the Pacific station, and convey them to Colon, from whence they will proceed by rail to Panama.

NAVAL UNIFORM.

ADMIRALTY, October 11, 1883.

The following is the description of the uniform great-coat which, in pursuance of her Majesty's pleasure, may be worn by officers of the Royal Navy over full-dress and other uniform, and which is substituted for the great-coat hitherto authorised:—Blue milled cloth. Length, to come to 14 inches from the ground. Double-breasted; six uniform buttons on each side, the bottom button not to come below the level of the hip; two pockets with flaps across the skirt, in front of the hip. A plait down the back, with an opening at the bottom 18 inches long, with a fly, and four small plain buttons. A cloth strap behind, with a button-hole at each end, eight inches apart, and two corresponding uniform buttons, to confine the waist to required size. Stand and fall collar, with hook and eye in collar seam. Edges of coat to be double-stitched.

NAVAL KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.

ADMIRALTY, October 9, 1883.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty do hereby give notice to such lieutenants of the Royal Navy, and to such lieutenants retired with the rank of commander, as are desirous of being recommended for the appointment of Naval Knight of Windsor, under the will of the late Samuel Travers, Esq., that they must apply at this office, either personally or by letter, on or before November 12 next, when they will be informed of the nature of the certificates and testimonials which are required to show that they come within the meaning of the will, an extract from which is herewith appended:—"These gentlemen are to be superannuated or disabled lieutenants of English men-of-war, single men, without children, inclined to lead a virtuous, studious, and devout life; to be removed, if they give occasion for scandal." By the Act 30 and 31 Victoria, cap. 100, widowers are deemed single men within the meaning of the will in question.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

Berehaven, Bantry Bay, October 10, 1883.

We left Plymouth early last Thursday morning, the 4th, and next day had target practice, firing away the whole of this quarter's allowance of ammunition. As a rule, the Squadron spreads for practice, and each ship fires at her targets independently, but this time we did not. Orders were given, by signal, to prepare two targets. The Squadron formed single column line ahead, and a target was dropped by each ship simultaneously; after standing on a little, the second was dropped in the same manner, making a long line of twelve targets. The Squadron, still in single column line ahead, steamed backwards and forwards past the targets, firing as they came within range, both electric broadsides and independent firing. The sight was very fine, especially now and then when the whole line was engaged. The firing on the whole was very good, some of the electric broadsides being especially so. At the conclusion of the firing, spar torpedo exercise was carried out. The next day we had what is rather unusual, sail-drill on Saturday evening, but the temptation offered by a light, fair wind and a fine evening was too strong to be resisted, and we had a turn at "all possible sail." We arrived here at 8 o'clock on Sunday morning, and came-to in the same order as the last time we were here, except that, as our stay is to be a short one, we are at single anchor, instead of being moored. The Valorous, which we had left behind at Plymouth, rejoined us soon after our arrival. Since Sunday torpedo practice and inspections have been the order of the day. The torpedo work for the quarter has been completed. On Monday and Tuesday Admiral Dowell inspected the Northumberland and Admiral Wilson the Achilles, and this forenoon Admiral Dowell commenced his inspection of the Sultan. We leave to-day for Portland.

COMMANDER MAXWELL HERON.

A correspondent signing himself "Barbarossa" writes:—"The intimation conveyed in the letter of Com. Maxwell Heron's solicitor will probably be satisfactory to the friends of that officer, in proportion to the extent of the information it affords. That the minutes of the court-martial should be forwarded to the Law Officers of the Crown would be a procedure necessary in itself, and one only in accordance with precedent. The notification, however, would have been more interesting, if the solicitor had been in a position to affirm, 'to the best of his belief,' that the proceedings of the court-martial had, or had not, been accompanied by the report of the Court of Inquiry, or by the 'confidential' report which, it would appear, the Assistant-Secretary to the Admiralty draws up for their Lordships' instruction and guidance in these matters. For, as in the case of the Cambridge court-martial, it is possible that Mr. Swainson has taken on himself to comment on the 'light' sentence of the court, from his peculiar point of view; and for the present, unhappily, no questions can be asked. The obsequious zeal of a permanent official will always meet with a material reward to carry comfort to his soul. The friends of the dismissed officer can also feel at least a consolation, if they cannot receive a recompense. The comments of an irresponsible person may influence an overworked or a too-confiding Lord of the Admiralty, but—scarcely—an Attorney-General."

Among recent clearances from the Admiralty "Rotten Row," surely so noteworthy a vessel as the little Pearl is worthy of some passing notice, at the hands of at least the service papers. In connection with the Indian Mutiny, the name of the Pearl will be always associated with the deeds of that gallant band of seamen which, under the present Sir Edward Sotheby, rendered such valuable services in conjunction with the famous Shannon Naval Brigade, under Sir William Peel. With Capt. Sotheby, and under the leadership of the present Admiral Henry Duncan Grant, the late Capt. Nicholas Turnour, and Frederick George Pym, now a retired major-general of Marines, our Blue-jackets fought gallantly at Sohunpore and Phoolpore; were with the advance at the attack on the fort of Betwa; and, after many encounters with the enemy, fought their last fight at Toolsepore, where they behaved as they had throughout the campaign. Prior to the re-embarkation of the brigade, their services were specially acknowledged in an "Extraordinary Gazette" by the Governor-General, the officers being afterwards entertained at a dinner in the town hall, Calcutta, and by the members of the Madras Club. The Pearl passed two subsequent commissions in the East, taking part, under the present Vice-Admiral Borlase, C.B., in the Taeping operations and the Japan War, including the engagement at Kagosima, and serving on the China station under Capt. John Ross. Her name will also be painfully associated with the memory of the late Comdre. Goodenough, as the flagship in Australia of that ill-fated and gallant officer.—Whitehall Review.

The Arethusa, 10, second-class double-screw steam cruiser, 3,478 tons, 5,000 horse-power, arrived at Sheerness on Saturday afternoon from Glasgow. She had a very rough passage round from the Clyde, and was compelled to put in at Milford Haven through stress of weather. Her engines and machinery worked very smoothly, and a high rate of speed was attained. The vessel is in the temporary charge of Com. Robert H. Paul and a navigating party from Sheerness Royal Naval Barracks. The Sea-horse, twin-screw, special service steamer, accompanied the Arethusa from Glasgow to Sheerness. The Arethusa will be at once completed for sea.

H.M.S. EXCELLENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Many thanks for your able article on the subject of the short course. I am high up on the Lieutenants' List, and my experience of the Excellent fully bears out all you have written. I consider the system degrading, and under no circumstances would I consent to submit to the expense and annoyance of another short course. Let the Excellent people once understand that lieutenants expect and intend to be treated like officers and gentlemen, and a short course may once again become popular. I have heard but one opinion expressed by those unfortunates who have been beguiled into placing themselves in the painfully false position at present endured by short-course lieutenants, and that is that the whole system is bad, and the orders illegal. One officer did, I believe, once bring the matter before their Lordships, and the answer he got was pithy, if not logical. He was discharged to half-pay, without reference being made to the subject-matter of his letter. Trusting you will not let the matter rest, I beg to sign myself A SENIOR LIEUTENANT.

SIR,—With reference to a very sensible article which appeared in your last edition, on the subject of the treatment of lieutenants who volunteer to go in for what is known as a "short course" of gunnery instruction, may I state that, having been through that ordeal some years ago, I would certainly not try another course under the present régime. In the Vernon, things were arranged very differently; there we had only to attend to the duties for which we were specially appointed. And the instruction, instead of being relegated to a warrant or petty officer, was generally undertaken by a lieutenant. Why the Admiralty should try and make the science of modern naval gunnery unpopular is probably only known to their Lordships and the gunnery staff. Hoping that you will use your powerful interest in this matter, which seriously affects the service, I am, &c., A LIEUTENANT.

SIR,—Your article on the Excellent has not appeared one moment too soon. Heartily sympathising with the lieutenants, it is still somewhat trying to hear the same old growl class after class of short course; and if their Lordships are wise in their generation, your well-merited strictures should secure me in future what I sign myself,—

A PEACEFUL PIPE.

SIR,—Your straight writing in the matter of the short course as carried out on board the Excellent ought to do some good. It is scandalous that lieutenants who voluntarily undergo the course to improve their efficiency as officers should be treated in such a way as to disgust the service. Once bitten, twice shy. I never intend to give the authorities another chance while the present rotten system flourishes.—I am, &c., ANCIENT.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Will you grant me a small space to answer Lord Henry Lennox from a naval point of view? What possible advantage does he propose to obtain by proving (and his premisses are disputed) which Government built—or promised to build, without fulfilment—the most ironclad tonnage; or by comparing the number of English and French battle ships? Naval history infallibly teaches that superiority on the ocean does not rest solely upon the number, but upon the excellence of individual types of ships and men. We are a great commercial nation, depending for our daily bread—indeed, almost for our existence—upon the freedom of the ocean highways. If Lord Henry would devote his administrative experience to considering the number and type of ships suitable to the attainment of this object, he would confer a great benefit upon the Navy, and convince himself that, of whatever value battle ships may be to the French, they are not the chief factors in the naval requirements of this empire.—I am, &c.,

HENRY CLEVELAND, Captain R.N.

Amusements.

The Covent Garden Promenade Concerts continue to be very well attended. Mr. Maas, the deservedly popular tenor, has delighted the audience by his impressive rendering of Dibdin's "Tom Bowling" and other songs; while the excellence of the orchestra has been shown in the admirable performance of a variety of classical and popular compositions. Madame Rose Hersee and Signor Foli have been re-engaged, and towards the close of the present month Mr. Sims Reeves and Mr. Santley will appear for a few nights in the list of vocalists, numbered seats being provided for these occasions.

DRURY LANE THEATRE has been closed, to allow of the necessary scenic rehearsals of a new drama by Messrs. Robert Buchanan and Augustus Harris, entitled "A Sailor and His Lass," arranged for production on Monday night. The new piece, in five acts and seventeen tableaux, will be pictorially illustrated by Messrs. Grieve, Emden, Perkins, and Ryan, and the prominent scenic features will be a farm and apple orchard, livery stables, a secret dynamite factory, the foundering of a ship at sea, views of the Central Criminal Court, and the interior of Newgate. A strong cast is provided, including Misses Harriett Jay, Sophie Eyre, Clara Jecks, and Messrs. Harris, J. Fernandez, H. George, A. C. Lilly, H. Nicholls, and H. Jackson.

On the ADELPHI stage has been effectively placed a new five-act melodrama, written by Mr. George R. Sims and Mr. Henry Pettitt, and entitled "In the Ranks." The military element is not so prominent as the title indicates. The hero does not enlist in the army till the close of the third act, and his brief career as a soldier ends before the fourth act terminates. Rapid changes of scene, enabling one elaborate effect to be produced after another, invite the frequent plaudits of the spectator, while a plot has been framed, keeping the attention of the audience unflaggingly occupied. Mr. Charles Warner plays the prominent character, Ned Drayton, with vigour and earnestness, and Miss Isabel Bateman, warmly welcomed on her return to the stage, represents the heroine with much tenderness and grace. Mr. Ryder is a bluff old colonel, Mr. Beveridge forcibly portrays the malignity of the necessary villain, and Mr. E. W. Garden adroitly represents a good-hearted rustic with a weakness for hares and rabbits. Miss Mary Rorke, Mrs. H. Leigh, Miss Harriet Coveney, Mr. W. Herbert, Mr. Shore, and Mr. Beauchamp also distinguish themselves in slight but not unimportant characters. The success attained on the first night has been fully confirmed at succeeding representations.

Mr. F. C. Burnand's three-act fairy burlesque drama, called "Ariel," produced at the GAIETY on Monday night, is an elaborate extravaganza of the usual pattern held in so much favour by the patrons of that theatre. Although appropriating the names of the characters in "The Tempest," it can hardly be called a parody of Shakespeare's play. Miss E. Farren, who is the "tricksy sprite," acts, sings, and dances with even more than her accustomed vivacity; and adorned with all the embellishments a profusion of electric lights can afford, produces a singularly dazzling effect when making her first appearance in the scene of the shipwreck. Comicalities of various kinds are furnished by Mr. Monkhouse as Prospero, Mr. Elton as Caliban, portrayed as a dunce of a schoolboy; Mr. Dallas as a lugubrious Alonzo, and Mr. Squire, Mr. Henley, and Mr. Wyatt as Gonzago, Antonio, and Sebastian. Miss Gilchrist and Miss Phyllis Broughton dance gracefully together as Miranda and Ferdinand; and fanciful costumes, picturesque scenery, lively music, and a crowd of pretty faces and figures sufficed to secure an immediate success, while indicating the probability of a lengthy career.

Mr. Henry Irving entertained a number of his personal friends at a dinner-party given at the Garrick Club on Sunday night, the last evening he had at his disposal prior to his departure for America.

On Wednesday was given at the PRINCESS'S THEATRE the 250th representation of "The Silver King," which remains as attractive as ever. Mr. H. A. Jones's neatly written comedietta of "A Clerical Error," originally produced at the Court Theatre on Oct. 13, 1879, was revived for the occasion with a change of caste, agreeably represented by Miss Helen Vincent, and Messrs. Walter Speakman, Neville Doone, and George Barrett.

A new and original comedy, in four acts entitled, "Young Folks' Ways," will be produced at the ST. JAMES'S next week. The piece is founded on Mrs. Burnett's American story, "Esmeralda," and will have the support of Mrs. Hermann Vezin, Miss Linda Dietz, Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, Mr. George Alexander, Mr. J. Maclean, and Mr. Hare, too long absent from these boards.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Directors of the Rhondda and Swansea Bay Railway Company, incorporated by Act of Parliament, having obtained a special Act of Parliament, which received the Royal Assent on August 2 last, authorising the Company to extend their main line, now in course of construction, direct to Swansea, are prepared to receive applications for the remainder of the share capital of the Company, in shares of £10 each.

The object is the construction of a railway from the Taff Vale Railway, in the Rhondda Valley, to Swansea and the Swansea Bay ports.

Official returns show the enormous extent and expansion of the coal trade of the Rhondda Valley. In 1880 the output of the upper part only was 4,258,866 tons; in 1881, 4,535,443 tons; and in 1882, 4,835,781 tons, showing a progressive increase. The population is now 13 times as large as it was in 1861, and is rapidly increasing.

The railway communicates with the Taff Vale Railway system, and will provide good access to the Rhondda Valley, enabling shipping at Swansea and Swansea Bay ports to obtain cargoes of Rhondda coal, which, although greatly required, cannot now be procured there.

The Company's route will reduce the distance by rail from Treherbert, in the Rhondda Valley, to Swansea from 54 to 19½ miles; the time from three hours to one hour and a quarter; and the third-class fares from 4s 6d to 1s 7d.

The local traffic will be much augmented by through traffic in connection with the Taff Vale, Great Western, Midland, London and North-Western, and other Railways between Newport and Eastward, and Swansea and Westward, the Company's route being shorter than the present, and will pass for nearly the whole distance through the coal basin, thus accommodating the mining population.

Another very important feature in favour of the proposed railway is that it will serve an extensive new coal field in the Avan Valley, through the centre of which it runs, and which contains practically unlimited quantities of valuable coal.

The mining and labouring populations of the Rhondda Valley have at present no direct railway communication with the sea-side resorts in the beautiful Bay of Swansea. The Company's railway will reduce the distance by rail from 40 to 15 miles; such facility cannot fail to create a large daily and holiday traffic.

This railway will also enable them to avail themselves of the well-supplied markets of Swansea, Neath, and Aberavon, while the dairy and farm produce of Carmarthenshire and Pembrokeshire will find a ready sale in the Rhondda Valley.

With the exception of a short distance the gradients practically throughout the line fall with the load, which for heavy coal traffic, as in the case of the Taff Vale Railway, is a most important element of economy in working expenses.

It is encouraging to note the large dividends paid by two independent railways carrying coal from the lateral valleys of the South Wales coalfield to the seaport, viz.:—

£100 Stock is now quoted.

Taff Vale Railway Company, 18 per cent.	£288 to £290
Rhymney Railway Company, 10 per cent.	174 to 176

In addition to the three excellent and well-appointed docks at Swansea, including the magnificent new deep-water dock, suitable for the largest class of ocean steamers, there are extensive docks at Briton Ferry and Port Talbot.

The import trade into Swansea of minerals of all descriptions exceeds that of any other port in the kingdom, so that not only is the Rhondda steam coal required for shipment, but the small and bituminous coals are much needed by the coal consuming works—copper, silver, gold, lead, zinc, nickel, cobalt, tinplate, iron, steel, chemical, complex-ore works, and other manufactories, which abound in the districts of Port Talbot, Briton Ferry, Neath, and Swansea. Swansea is also the chief seat of the patent fuel industry. Large quantities of coal for these and other requirements must necessarily pass over the Company's railway.

Swansea has the great advantage of being 40 miles down Channel from Cardiff, and is itself actually within the coalfield.

The following figures will afford some idea of the excellent prospects of the undertaking as a dividend-paying property.

According to the official return, as given above, the total output of coal in the Rhondda Valley during the year 1882 was 4 835,781 tons.

Taking these figures as a basis for calculation, and assuming that only 1,500,000 tons will be carried by this line to Swansea, it will produce a gross revenue of £103,125. To this must be added the receipts from other sources, namely, the Avan Valley Coalfield, the passenger, local, import, miscellaneous, and through traffic and mails, which, even if taken at the very low estimate of £23 per mile per week, would give a further gross income of £29,601, forming a total of £132,726 per annum.

This amount, after deducting 50 per cent. for working expenses, leaves £66,363 net receipts, more than sufficient to pay 10 per cent. on the Share Capital of the Company, after providing for the interest on the amount of the borrowing powers.

There is, therefore, every probability that as soon as the line is opened for traffic, it will take its place among the best dividend-paying railways in the Kingdom.

The line is to be opened in sections as each is completed. The works are in active course of construction, and it is expected the first section will be opened in the course of the current year.

Shares will be allotted in order of priority of application. Where no allotment is made, the deposit will be returned in full.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE.

From SYMES and Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Medical Hall, Simla, January 5, 1881.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, Esq., 33 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,

BRONCHITIS,

EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,

PALPITATION, HYSTERIA, and is the true Palliative in

NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,

TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

GREAT SPECIFIC for

DIARRHŒA,

CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

Sold in Bottles, 1s 1½d, 2s 9d, 4s 6d, by all Chemists.

CO-OPERATION. — COOPER COOPER and CO. also invite attention to the new System of Co-operation in the purchase of Tea by persons living in the country through the medium of the Parcels Post.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." IN 1801, a British force, less than 18,000 strong, under Sir Ralph Abercromby, and, after his lamented death, under General Hutchinson, landed in Egypt, defeated a much larger number of Napoleon's veterans in several hardly contested battles, captured all the fortified places held by the French, and finally expelled them from that country, having taken more than 20,000 French soldiers prisoners during the campaign. Abercromby's Army landed in Aboukir Bay on March 8. As the first division approached the shore in the boats of the Fleet, they were received by a heavy fire of artillery and musketry. But the sailors pulled on undauntedly, though many were killed or wounded. Each battalion, as it landed, formed up quickly and advanced without hesitation, and when near the French, charged. Before 2,000 had landed, the enemy's position was carried, and the brilliant action of Aboukir, uncommemorated on the colours of the victors, was gained. Our casualties amounted to 748, a number that would probably have been doubled, had there been any confusion in landing or delay in the attack. Advancing along the isthmus leading to Alexandria, Abercromby encountered the French on the 13th at Nicopolis, or Mandora. An obstinately-contested battle ensued, in which the British were finally victorious, and the French retreated to the fortified heights near Alexandria. Our casualties in this battle were 1,322, including eighty officers. The name of "Mandora," well earned by many regiments, was granted to two only, the 90th and 92nd, which formed the advance guards. On March 21 the French attacked in great force, and the battle of Alexandria, as it is usually called, was fought. A glorious victory was dearly bought by the death of the revered commander, Sir Ralph Abercromby, and by the loss of 1,460 killed and wounded. The only record of this particular battle granted to any regiment was the privilege conferred on the 28th Regiment of wearing their number on the back of their head-dress as well as on the front, in recognition of the gallantry with which they repelled attacks from the front and rear at the same time. The exigencies of space oblige us to omit all mention of the further successes of the campaign till the evacuation of Egypt by the French, after the capitulation of Alexandria, in September, 1801. General Hutchinson was made a Peer, the widow of Sir Ralph Abercromby was created a Baroness; but we may look in vain for a long list of honours and rewards bestowed on those who fought so nobly in Egypt in 1801. When we consider that our soldiers were then opposed to the conquerors of Europe, and that their successes were only gained with very heavy loss, the rewards given by a grateful country seem strangely inadequate. But in those days, officers and men were expected to do their duty manfully against any enemy and in any climate, with little reward beyond the approbation of their country, conveyed to them by the votes of Parliament.

Of the British Expedition to Egypt in 1807, we would say nothing here, but that the omission might be misinterpreted. Its numbers were utterly inadequate to the objects for which it was sent; the devotion of the officers and the bravery of the men were unavailing, and that failure which might have been foreseen quickly ensued.

In 1882, British troops once more landed in Egypt, but under very different circumstances from those of the former expeditions. An "army corps" much stronger, numerically at least, than Abercromby's force, was sent there. It was commanded by a general of high qualifications as a leader of men in action, aided by an experienced and (with a few exceptions) carefully selected staff. Its administrative departments were developed to an extent unknown in former wars; and its means of transport and communication were such as our forefathers could not have imagined. It was augmented, too, by an Indian contingent, which, more fortunate than Baird's in 1801, arrived in time to take its share in the only battle of the campaign. This army corps, to the completing of which the efficiency of nearly every cavalry regiment and "line battalion" on home service had been sacrificed, defeated, with trifling loss, Arabi's half-disciplined and mongrel host, the main components of which, the Fellahs, were commonly mentioned with unmitigated contempt, till their dispersion was made the occasion of an unprecedented shower of promotions, orders, and decorations. Besides the medal and star which were given to every one in Egypt between certain dates, whether actually engaged or not, we find the following rewards as immediate results of the victory. In the Army and Marines, 122 promotions were given, exclusive of departmental advancements. The Order of the Bath was given to 66 officers; the Order of the Medjidie to 197 (of whom 93 were on the staff); the Osmanieh Order to 97 (of whom 49 were on the staff); the Order of St. Michael and St. George to six; of the Star of India to two; and lastly, of the Indian Empire to two native officers. If we add the rewards given to Naval officers, and promotions and orders less directly announced, the total of special rewards given for this "little war" cannot be much less than 1,000, that is, about two for every man killed or wounded. Compared with this the rewards for Waterloo are dwarfed into insignificance. If the army which fought the French in Egypt in 1801 had been rewarded similarly and in proportion to their fighting and their losses, what would they have got? If the officers in the last campaign had been rewarded on the same scale as Abercromby's, would they have got anything? In future wars, which will come inevitably, a happy medium may be found between unreasonable niggardliness and indiscriminate profusion.

IT is much to be regretted that their Lordships should labour under the misapprehension that Lieutenants apply for permission to go through a short course in order to get on full pay, and are, therefore, willing to put up with any discomfort and annoyance to obtain this boon. It is simply absurd to imagine that this consideration can influence officers, for the mess expenses more than run away with the difference between full and half-pay. The Excellent is an exceptional establishment, and, as at Greenwich, there should be special rules to prevent officers being unduly taxed in their praiseworthy effort to increase their efficiency. The regulations at Greenwich are framed in a liberal spirit, for if an officer desires to live out of College, he has simply to ask permission, and ipso facto becomes an honorary member, when no charge is made on the score of messing. If he lunches in the College mess, the 1s. 6d. allowed by the Admiralty in lieu of provisions is considered sufficient to cover this meal, without any charge against the officer. What Lieutenants desire, and have a right to expect, is that their Lordships should give their sanction to a similar arrangement on board the Excellent. It is manifestly unjust that a married man should be forced to join in the expenses of a mess in which he never willingly takes a meal, simply because that mess happens to be located on board the hulk in which the drills are carried out. The same unanswerable logic forces upon an officer a cabin on the orlop deck of a rotten old three-decker, within thirty yards of, and on the same level with, the vast mud flats which make that portion of Portsmouth Harbour unpleasantly odoriferous, a combination which can scarcely be pleasant or conducive to health, and certainly forms a fruitful source of complaint. When Captains and Commanders attend the gunnery course, they do not fall in at the guns, and Senior Lieutenants very reasonably think they might be treated with the same consideration. The actual manual labour cannot offer much stimulation to the brain, and might safely be dispensed with in the case of any officer going through the course for the second time. Neither the Greenwich, Cambridge, nor Vernon courses of study are perfect; but the fact of the students being gentlemen is never lost sight of, and the Staff of the Excellent would do well to take either one of them as an example for the treatment of officers; and that they will, "'tis a consummation devoutly to be wished," and thus avert the inevitable end of a continuance of their present suicidal policy.

A COURT-MARTIAL has been held lately at Shrewsbury which calls for remark, demonstrating, as it does, a few—but only a few—of the dangers which are likely to result from the present system of Army organisation, by which Line and Militia are mashed up into an incongruous mass,—or, as Lord Cardwell's admirers would say, "harmonious whole." We only hope that in other Districts in the United Kingdom the system is being worked more successfully than it evidently has been at Shrewsbury. But we almost fear that the Shrewsbury District may be taken as a fair specimen of the state of things which exists in fully two-thirds of the Districts into which the United Kingdom has, for the purposes of Territorialism, been parcelled out. At Shrewsbury, the Line and Militia, having been welded together—made one, as it were, according to the ideas of the originators of the Territorial scheme—are expected to live as a sort of "happy family" under one roof; at any rate, within one set of barrack walls. In other words, the 53rd and 85th Regiments and the Shropshire Militia, having been mashed by the "harmonious-whole" process into one regiment of three battalions, under the designation of the King's (Shropshire Light Infantry), are told that henceforth their interests will be identical, and that all misunderstandings between them must cease. But it is always more easy to issue orders than to enforce obedience. And so it has been found in this case, if we may judge from the published accounts of the court-martial on the unfortunate Colour-Serjeant Malins, of the 3rd Battalion of that most happy of military families, the King's (Shropshire) Light Infantry. We have rarely come across a case, even in the annals of military jurisprudence, in which there have been more discreditable disclosures; and if Shrewsbury is a fair specimen of what Regimental Districts are generally, we may be pardoned for saying that the sooner the harmonising system is abandoned as a failure, the better. We cannot see how any good can ever result from an organisation which can only produce one effect,—a stronger feeling of antagonism than ever between two services which are supposed to live on terms of amity. Colour-

Serjeant Malins, it appears, was arraigned on a charge of conduct "to the prejudice of good order and military discipline, in that on September 5 he said to Colour-Serjeant Ball, 3rd Battalion King's (Shropshire Light Infantry), 'I will punch your —— eye!' or words to that effect." The evidence was throughout of the most conflicting character, and no one reading it can fail to be impressed by the utter want of discipline and good order which is apparently the chief characteristic of Copthorne Barracks, Shrewsbury. The whole case serves as a revelation to us, and we only hope and trust that, bad as matters may be elsewhere, they have not in other Districts been allowed to go to the length that they have gone at Shrewsbury. Knowing as we do what Military courts-martial are, we are prepared to make every allowance, but in the present instance there seems to have been a systematic endeavour made to prejudice, for some reason, the case of an old soldier of many years' good character, not because the man himself had offended, but because the system in the carrying-out of which he is an instrument, if only an unimportant one, is unworkable. We have always been strongly opposed to the Territorial system, because from the first we recognised the dangers which would result therefrom, and the impracticability of any scheme the aim and object of which was to weld together for administrative purposes two services the conditions of which are altogether dissimilar, and must ever remain so. And the Shrewsbury court-martial, if it does nothing else, shows beyond doubt that the evils which we expected to result from the Territorial system do actually exist, and will, there is reason to fear, increase to an alarming extent, unless the authorities adopt a vigorous course of action, and stamp out petty jealousies by every means in their power—a task which they will find rather difficult of accomplishment. The merest novice in court-martial procedure, reading the published reports of the evidence, must see at once the conflicting nature of the statements put forward by the witnesses for the prosecution. The misunderstanding, for such in reality it has been, is wholly attributable to one fact,—that, as at present organised, the Regimental Districts, instead of being a source of strength, are really an element of weakness in our Military organisation. This we feel sure the officer commanding the 3rd Battalion King's (Shropshire Light Infantry) will be the first to admit. He has had a fair chance of judging as to the advantages and disadvantages of the system, and his experience will, we feel certain, have had the effect of convincing him that the harmonious-whole theory, like other theories of the last few years, though plausible enough, is fraught with all manner of dangers when put on its trial. The Territorial System was brought in with the ostensible view of improving the Militia. Instead of promoting the good of the Constitutional Force, it has done it much injury, both directly and indirectly. This the case of Serjeant Malins establishes beyond doubt. It is ridiculous to suppose that the Staff of the Militia will regard with satisfaction an arrangement which requires them to serve, as it were, two masters,—their own commanding officers, and the officers commanding the Regimental Districts, and this without receiving any additional remuneration for this extra work. As matters stand, friction must be created from time to time. Here and there, commanding officers will be found, of course, blessed with sufficient tact to cause matters to run smoothly between the two services. But where harmony exists, the credit will rest entirely with those in authority at the time in the Regimental District. The regulations themselves would almost seem to have been framed with the view of ruining the Militia, whilst all the time we are told that they are intended to confer great and lasting benefits on that service. The benefits may be great and lasting, in Districts in which the Head-quarters of the Line and the Militia are kept thoroughly distinct. But to place the depôts of the Line Battalion and those of the Militia Battalion under one roof, and expect the system to operate for the good of the Militia service generally, is to look for far too much from human nature, as time will show.

THE Lords of the Admiralty have this week completed their annual inspection of Portsmouth Dockyard. Before proceeding to our principal Naval Arsenal, their Lordships utilised the coming event as an excuse to publish a document purporting to be a straightforward statement of the present state and condition of the Navy, and, at the same time, a refutation of the statements so often publicly made by Admiral of the Fleet Sir Thomas Symonds, Admiral Sir John Hay, M.P., Commander Price, M.P., and Lord Henry Lennox, to the effect that, when compared with the French Navy, which has no vast Colonial Empire or large maritime commerce to defend, England's Navy, which has at all times this duty to perform, is, by comparison, lamentably weak, and utterly unable to discharge the numerous duties at all times committed to its care. The document made public by the Admiralty was written evidently within the precincts of Whitehall, by some one having "a minute acquaintance with the history of our existing ships, and with every detail of construction, actual or projected," and this official knowledge—for it can be none other—"enables him to present a complete picture of the British Navy of the hour, and of the problems which await the decision of the official visitors" of our most important Naval Arsenal. The Times, in a "leader" on their communiqué, then goes on to say regarding the writer thereof, that "his long experience of what may be called the politics of the Navy, of its vicissitudes under successive changes of Government, and amid the alterations of alarmed activity and too confident parsimony, permits him to form a sound judgment on the criticisms with which the present Administration has been assailed." This points to a permanent official as the writer of the communiqué, and to one who has an intimate knowledge "of the problems which await the decision of the Lords of the Admiralty." It appears, indeed, to be an open secret that the Chief Constructor of the Navy is the author of the document published to reassure the country as to the efficiency of England's first line of defence. No wonder, then, that we find the old and worn-out arguments rehabilitated to refute the critical examination his constructive policy has so recently been subjected to. He commences by pointing out that the critics of the policy of the present Administration have been unable to agree among themselves, even as to the proper classification to be adopted when comparing the English and French Fleets. That while it was held of the utmost importance by some that new ships should be laid down, Mr. W. H. Smith, M.P., a late First Lord, was of opinion that repairs and refits should be primarily considered. The official communiqué then accepts Sir Thomas Brassey's mode of classification, after rejecting that of naval experts, and assures the public that Sir Thomas "had no difficulty in demonstrating that the balance was largely in favour of England," when "displacement tonnage" was accepted as the standard of comparison between the strength of the English and French Fleets. We have seldom heard anything more absurd. This mode of comparing the two navies must necessarily include the displacement tonnage of the "egg-shells" built when ironclads were first introduced, vessels ranging from 5,000 to 10,000 tons, such as the Warrior, Black Prince, Achilles, Iron Duke, Defence, Resistance, Lord Warden, Northumberland, and many others, which are utterly useless for modern war purposes. These ships, or most of them, were built before the French had an ironclad at all. What the critics of the policy of the present administration say is, that in 1885 the French will have as many modern battle-ships as this country will then possess. Commander Price, who has visited the French arsenals, and who is a man on whose judgment and discretion we can thoroughly rely, takes guns and armour as his criteria of comparison. Nothing can be more fair. And what conclusion does he then arrive at? That in 1885, or when all the ships now building are completed, "England will possess thirty-six ships of the first and second-class, carrying guns of the average weight of thirty-five tons, half of them being muzzle-loaders, protected by armour thirteen inches thick; and that France will at the same date possess an equal number of ships, carrying guns of the average weight of forty tons, all breech-loaders, protected by armour fourteen and a half inches thick." In another column will be found a letter on the "State of the Navy," from the pen of a distinguished naval officer of rank, who is not ashamed to sign himself "A Naval Alarmist," for he has good cause to be alarmed at the apathy of the Admiralty when a matter of such vital importance to the nation is considered. That letter we commend to the serious consideration of all Englishmen. For the Admiralty claim credit for that they have preferred to devote the bulk of their limited resources to pushing forward the construction of a few ironclads, and of their not having made any extra call upon the taxpayers, at a time when an honest exposition of the real state and condition of the Navy would have at once proved to the country the imperative necessity of an immediate increase in the Naval Estimates to enable a more vigorous constructive policy to be entered upon. By thus attempting to delude the public into believing that the Navy is sufficiently strong to protect the Empire, the Admiralty have been guilty of something near akin to a crime. For, by thus appealing to the thrift of the nation with a view of gaining its support for a so-called economical and careful administration, the Admiralty have seriously endangered the safety and future welfare of the whole Empire.

The Channel Squadron remains at Portland, awaiting the arrival of the Lords of the Admiralty to inspect the ships this day, on their way to Plymouth.

The Admiralty have ordered the Dido to proceed to Jeremie, in the island of Hayti, to investigate into the cause of the Government batteries there situated firing into the British steamer Alps, during the recent insurrection, and injuring her by their shell fire at a time when the British Consul was proceeding on board.

Mr. Pasco, retired Paymaster, R.N., has settled the question as to who the officer was who received from Nelson the order to hoist the famous signal, and what were the exact words used, thereby correcting the version supplied by James's "Naval History" of this memorable episode in the life of our greatest admiral. Quoting from Vol. VII. of the "Despatches and Letters of Lord Nelson, with Notes by Sir N. H. Nicolas," which originally belonged to the late Admiral Pasco, who was senior and Signal Lieutenant of the Victory at the battle of Trafalgar, Mr. Pasco sends the following extract to a contemporary, taken from page 150 of the work above mentioned:—"The following are, however, the real facts as they have been related by Captain John Pasco, who acted as Flag-Lieutenant of the Victory, and who has been so good as to testify to their accuracy, in a letter to the Editor:—'His Lordship came to me on the poop, and after ordering certain signals to be made, about a quarter to noon, he said, "Mr. Pasco, I wish to say to the Fleet, 'England confides that every man will do his duty,'" and he added, "You must be quick, for I have one more to make, which is for close action." I replied, "If your Lordship will permit me to substitute the word 'expects' for 'confides,' the signal will soon be completed, because the word 'expects' is in the vocabulary, and 'confides' must be spelt." His Lordship replied, in haste, and with seeming satisfaction, "That will do, Pasco; make it directly." When it had been answered by a few ships in the van, he ordered me to make the signal for close action, and to keep it up. Accordingly, I hoisted No. 16 at the (main) topgallant-mast head, and there it remained until shot away.'"

That seamanship is seriously deteriorating in the Navy has been made painfully apparent this week by the spectacle of four training brigs being unable to pick up their moorings in Plymouth Sound, under circumstances which put the seamanship of their Commanders to a slight test. The brigs were within an ace of being lost under the Hoe, simply because the officers in command do not appear to have taken the precaution to have their anchors clear, and ready to let go in case of emergency. Having missed their mooring buoys, a running moor should at once have been made. But nothing was ready, and no precautions apparently taken. The whole affair was a disgraceful muddle.

The Governments of the Colonies of New South Wales, Victoria, and Queensland are taking steps to efficiently protect their coasts and harbours in the event of a war between the Mother-country and a European Naval Power. They have recently given orders for Nordenfelt machine-guns for the defence of their harbours and men-of-war, and are purchasing 2-pounder shell guns, the Admiralty-pattern 1-inch anti-torpedo-boat guns, as also 10 and 5-barrel rifle calibre mitrailleurs, firing the Martini-Henry Government cartridge.

The Admiralty may be able to design an ironclad, but their Lordships certainly do not appear to be competent to design a "service" great-coat. This may be due to the fact that, as an old saying asserts, "it takes nine tailors to make a man," and if this be true, it would most assuredly be too much to expect "seven Lords" to be capable of deciding what a naval officer's "service" garment shall be like. In the present instance, their Lordships have lost sight of the fact that Naval officers wear swords, and they have consequently made it impossible for side-arms to be carried when the "Northbrook" great-coat is worn. To lash the sword on over the coat would look ridiculous. To wear it under will be most inconvenient, for the officer so wearing it would never be able to use his sword, as no provision has been made for it. And yet it would have been an easy matter to have directed a slit to be left open on the left side, where the hilt of the sword could protrude from when hooked up under the great-coat.

Lieutenant W. U. Moore, in command of the Dart, was lately engaged in one of those "affairs" in which our vessels of war are now so often employed among the Islands of the New Hebrides group. Two Queensland "labour vessels," as they are called, were at Ambrym in the beginning of August, obtaining labourers, and, as often occurs, a native woman was said to have been taken by one of these vessels against her will. The master (Belbin) of the other vessel and the Government agent investigated the complaint and found it was not true, but the natives appear to have been persuaded that wrong had been done, for they fired into the colonial labour boat as it was returning to shore from the labour vessel, and killed the master. The Dart arrived at Ambrym on August 4, and Commander Moore landed a party of twenty men, and with Lieutenant Dawson and Boatswain T. Nineham in charge, led them at night, under the guidance of Mr. Craig, a white trader, and two natives, through the bush, so as to get at the village of Ballat, where Belbin was killed. As "day broke," the alarmed natives yelled and beat tomtoms and peppered away; but not many escaped, and "our boats came round, and the village was burnt down. Nothing could have been planned better. The captain was in the thick of it." So says Boatswain Nineham, who was badly wounded. and was taken to Noumea by the French man-of-war Bruat.

The Lords of the Admiralty brought their inspection of Portsmouth Dockyard to a close on Thursday. The seamen of the Excellent paraded on Whale Island, and were put through their field-exercise, after which their Lordships visited the Vernon. In the afternoon, they inspected the Marine Artillery Barracks at Eastney, and witnessed some experiments with the celebrated Krupp field-gun captured by the battalion at Kafr Dowar. Before leaving Portsmouth, their Lordships inquired into the cause of the unpopularity of the Excellent amongst the officers of the Navy.

A writer in Colburn's United Service Magazine for the current month speaks somewhat severely of the diet scale at Haslar Hospital. In a pleasantly written little sketch, entitled "Two Days in Haslar Hospital," in which humour, pathos, and romance are mixed up in about equal proportions, the writer calls attention to the starvation-diet of the officers in hospital. His narrative is so circumstantial, and the period to which he refers is so easily to be recognised, that there is not much difficulty in even identifying some of his dramatis personæ. The real point of interest to Naval officers, however, is that the paper constitutes in reality a charge against the Admiralty and the Medical authorities of the hospital, for the very insufficient food allowed to the patients. One of the patients in in the story represents that he had been in hospital forty-eight hours, and had only had something less than two pounds of food during the whole of that time. We have heard complaints before of the scant diet at Haslar, and it would certainly be satisfactory to know that these complaints are unfounded. There is one noticeable feature in regard to the patients mentioned in this story. The writer admits he was malingering, in order to get sick leave at home; a second had nothing the matter with him, but had been sent into hospital some days before with a sore throat, and seems to have remained after his malady was cured, in order to carry on a flirtation with the daughter of one of the resident doctors; a third was jolly, fat, gouty, and rheumatic; and a fourth thin and ill, having just returned from the West Coast of Africa. Probably few of their professional brethren would blame the doctors at Haslar for keeping such patients as these, or, at least, three out of the four, upon low diet; and the signal success of the treatment, which to us seems highly creditable to the professional officers, is proved by the fact that the officer who was shamming stayed only two days, and the young gentleman who was making love to the doctor's daughter married her a few weeks after. And who will blame the Medico for thus angling to catch a husband for his progeny?

At the late examination of the various sections at the School of Musketry, Hythe, for certificates, at the conclusion of the course, Lieutenants Daniell, Parish, and Raitt, of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, took respectively the first, second, and fifth places on the list.

A farewell dinner was given on Friday evening by the officers of the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines to the Rev. George Carwithen, on his retiring from the post of chaplain to the division.

A "General Officer," whose letter on "Our Boys" we published a few weeks ago, after commenting on the sons of officers enlisting in order to obtain their commissions through the ranks, says:—"A much larger number of Queen's Cadetships should be reserved for the Sovereign, quite one-third, to enable the Commander-in-Chief to nominate the sons of deserving officers to Sandhurst." We quite endorse this opinion, and at the same time add that the one commission which is offered to the sons of officers for a qualifying examination for the Royal Marines without competition should be increased fourfold. At present, only one is given annually; whereas the appointments for the last four years in the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marine Light Infantry together have averaged fully twenty new commissions per year. The advantage that may be derived by old officers is very small, when the per-centage of commissions offered under slightly favourable circumstances to their sons is only one in twenty.

We quote the following interesting and lucid piece of military organisation from the Morning Post:—"The portion of the 3rd Battery 1st Brigade Scottish Division, R.A., left behind on the embarkation of the battery for India, are attached to the 3rd Battery 1st Brigade Northern Division, at Dover, pending the arrival from India of the 8th Battery 1st Brigade, Scottish Division, to which they have been posted." The present Government has the reputation of being an economical Government. But is the present Artillery organisation, introduced under its fostering care, an economical organisation? It certainly is not in the matter of pens, paper, printing, and patience!

At a Conservative banquet at Wednesbury a few days ago, Lieutenant-Colonel F. Burnaby, in responding to the toast of "The Army, Navy, and Auxiliary Forces," criticised the mode in which examinations for commissions are conducted, and gave the following amusing specimens of the unpractical questions on the answering of which the success or failure of the aspirants to commissions in the Army unfortunately depends:—

> "He would tell them of some of the questions in the English paper:—By whom were the following sentences spoken? Continue the quotation when you can:—Lowliness is young ambition's ladder?—(laughter). The noise of battle hurtled in the air? Compare the character of Emilia with that of Desdemona?—(laughter). Select any four lines from the 'Haunch of Venison,' and scan them? Draw a map of the Atlantic Ocean, and represent upon it approximately by means of contour-lines the configuration of its basin?—(laughter). Was Pope swift or slow, careful or hasty, in composing his works? In what respect does the climate of Yakutsk differ from that of Madeira?—(laughter). These were questions set for 463 competitors, when only 107 could possibly secure admission into Sandhurst. Those young men who had been working with 'crammers' for months, if unsuccessful, had to return to their homes, after putting their parents to much expense, whilst the subjects studied would in many instances be of no practical use to the lads in any career which they might subsequently wish to pursue. As more marks were given to Latin and Greek than to French and German, the boys who wished to take high places were compelled to spend the greater part of their time in the study of dead languages. They saw this, if they looked at the list of successful and unsuccessful candidates. For example, No. 1 obtained 964 marks in mathematics, 165 in drawing, 2,363 for Latin, 1,165 for Greek; whilst No. 113 on the list of unsuccessful candidates received 1,604 marks for mathematics, 214 for drawing, 1,120 for French, 617 for German—thus beating No. 1 in mathematics and drawing, and showing a fair knowledge of French and German—yet he failed; whilst No. 1, who knew Latin, and could answer questions such as he had mentioned in English, took the first place. An examination, to be really practical, should comprise, besides modern languages, military history, geography, drawing, a knowledge of anatomy, the veterinary science, and engineering. Should a lad not obtain a commission, he would then be able to earn for himself an independent living in the English Colonies; whilst, should he be successful, he would be a far more efficient officer in time of war than a man who could translate Homer, Virgil, compose pretty Latin verses, and scan four lines from the 'Haunch of Venison'—(laughter)."

Colonel Burnaby's views are quite in accordance with those of practical soldiers and men of sound sense generally.

We notice in the latest edition of the Queen's Regulations a paragraph stating the substance of a General Order to which we have several times called attention, viz., that Majors appointed to that rank prior to July 1, 1881, are not to revert to the command of companies, but to carry on their duties as they did before the days of amalgamation of regiments. In spite of the General Order, and now the paragraph in the Queen's Regulations, we fail to find by the Army List that the regiments which have a Major appointed to that rank prior to July 1, 1881, have an extra Captain to command the vacant company, hence additional work and responsibility must fall on the senior subaltern. This is a decided hardship on the subaltern, for why should he be expected to perform a senior officer's duties, without either the pay or emoluments of the senior rank? Owing to the large reduction which took place in the Captains' rank in 1881, the senior subalterns are deserving of a little more consideration than the War Office now bestows upon them. Almost every regiment of Infantry is now reduced to its new establishment of ten captains,—an average reduction of five captains to each Territorial regiment from the original establishment. Two years is a short period to absorb so many captains, and it would be but fair to the subalterns of each regiment which has a major appointed as such prior to the Territorial scheme becoming law, to grant an additional captain to command the necessarily vacant company.

A memorandum on the subject of khaki clothing has been issued from the Adjutant-General's Office in India, and circulated amongst officers commanding British regiments. The Commander-in-Chief has come to the conclusion that khaki is far from popular; that it is difficult to get a good and uniform dye; and that frequent dyeing entails a heavy expense on the men, who have to pay for it. At the same time, Sir Donald Stewart is convinced that khaki of some kind is the best thing for soldiers' summer wear, and he hopes that a way of avoiding the inconveniences that have hitherto attended its introduction will be found before the next hot weather comes round. It is suggested that the Indian dhobi's method of washing is really the cause of many of the complaints that have been made; and "it will be necessary," says the Adjutant-General's memorandum, "to consider under what regimental arrangements it will be possible to enforce a system of washing which shall be free from these objections."

We understand that Lieutenant-General G. H. S. Willis, K.C.B., who commanded the First Division of the Egyptian Field Force, is shortly to be given the offer of a five years' command, in recognition of his distinguished services in Egypt.

The appointment of General Sir Henry Norman, K.C.B., as Governor of Jamaica has given considerable satisfaction, not only in military circles, but also among colonial officials resident in London. Sir Henry Norman is known to be a man full of vigour, and his experiences in India give him special qualifications for the duties for which he has been selected.

Lieutenant V. H. P. Caillard, Royal Engineers, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Edgar Vincent on the Turkish Bondholders' Commission. Lieutenant Caillard has had some experience of Turkey, having served there for a short time under the Foreign Office. He joined the Army on August 19, 1875.

THE ISLAND OF PERIM.

We are informed that a coaling station has just been established at the Island of Perim, close to the entrance of the Red Sea. Incorporated about three months ago, the "Perim Coal Company," backed up by several influential shipowners who have taken up most of the shares, lost no time in obtaining a concession from Government, and in setting on foot their new project. The terms of the concession are very favourable to the interests of the Company. They have obtained for a nominal rent a 30 years' lease of Perim Harbour and the adjacent land. By the terms of the agreement, the Directors of the Company have been granted unrestricted rights over the assigned territory until the expiration of their lease. Commander Mountjoy Squire, retired, R.N., the agent of the company, with a large staff of subordinates including a doctor (and a chaplain, who is shortly to arrive), is already hard at work, and the hitherto deserted harbour of Perim is now the scene of much bustle and activity. Beati possidentes! There is no doubt that the scheme will become a financial success. Perim is right in the course of all vessels passing up and down the Red Sea, whereas Aden is off the direct line. The harbour is an excellent one; it is deep enough to take in the largest ships afloat. There is no bar to be crossed, as at Aden, and ships can enter at the lowest tide. Coal can be sold as cheap at Perim as at Aden, while ships coaling there will escape the heavy harbour dues which are charged at the latter place to defray the cost of dredging. The question, however, is not merely one of financial interest. We are informed that the concession was signed by the Secretary of State for India without any reference to the Government of India, who have entered a strong protest against the policy of the act, and especially against the terms of the agreement, and who repudiate all responsibility in the matter. As the Government of India have pointed out, the existence of a coaling station at Perim alters the entire character and relative value of the island. Hitherto, Perim has been merely a military outpost of Aden, and certainly not a position of any real strategical importance. In the event of war, it would have been easy to have withdrawn the garrison to Aden, and temporarily abandoned the island, as not being worth defending and easy to recapture. This will no longer be possible when, by so doing, 50,000 tons of coal will fall into an enemy's hands. Perim is at present unfortified, and has only a garrison of one officer and 50 Sepoys. It is 90 miles from Aden, with which place it is unconnected by cable. It would be a tempting prize for an enemy's cruiser, which, we may be sure, would be close at hand, and ready to seize it, on the declaration of war. It must now either be properly fortified, or arrangements made to destroy the coal and stores in the event of war. The Government of India naturally and justly protest against being asked to contribute a single rupee in order to benefit an English coal company. We suspect the British taxpayer will incline to the same view, when a vote in Parliament is proposed for this purpose. As to the alternative of destroying the coal and stores on an emergency, it is more than doubtful whether such a project would be feasible. In any case, the Company would claim compensation for losses not previously stipulated for in the concession. The question is one of greater importance than might at first sight be supposed. It is desirable that public notice should be drawn to it. We cannot afford to allow our position in the Red Sea to be weakened for the sake of enriching a few shipowners; and it is a matter for regret that the India Office should have hastily concluded an agreement without consulting the local authorities in India, and without providing for contingencies which may at any moment arise, and be the source of much future perplexity.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Leave of absence for officers, and furloughs for non-commissioned officers and men, commenced during the week.

Although the drill season usually terminates after the autumn inspection by the Commander-in-Chief, field-days, outpost duty, and taking-up positions, combined with route-marching, will be practised during the winter months, as the weather permits.

The field batteries, which are all very weak, have commenced their usual winter course of riding and gun-drill.

Major-General Sir A. Clarke, Inspector-General of Fortifications, will visit the Camp on Tuesday next, to inspect the Royal Engineer troops and companies. If Sir Andrew Clarke, who is also Director of Works, would inspect, when here, a few of the huts occupied as married quarters by Infantry private soldiers, he will be able to judge for himself the sort of comfortable winter dwellings for women and children they are.

Quarters are now vacant in the two Camps for three Infantry battalions, but no augmentation of the strength of the Division is expected before the new year.

The musketry instruction of the Brigade of Guards is being continued at the Ash Rifle-ranges, North Camp. On Tuesday, a serious accident occurred at these ranges. In some unaccountable manner, a private of the 3rd Battalion, Grenadier Guards, while under cover in the mantelet, acting as marker, was struck in the shoulder by a bullet. A court of inquiry has been held.

The Lieutenant-General Commanding has ordered watch-coats to be issued for sentries on night duty, and an extra blanket to each man and each woman on the married establishment. Winter is rapidly approaching, and this issue of extra blankets is very necessary. A more liberal allowance, however, than is permitted by regulation, would be much appreciated by the married soldiers of the division, especially those whom Providence has blessed with many children, and whose fate it is to spend another winter in the rotten and leaky old huts of the North and South Camps.

Lieutenant Baldock, Shropshire Yeomanry, and Lieutenant Delap, Bucks Yeomanry, joined for a course of instruction at the Auxiliary Cavalry School on Monday.

Lieutenant Stamer, 16th Lancers, will join for a course of garrison instruction on the 1st prox.

Surgeon-Majors Smith, Stafford, and Elgee are in readiness to proceed to India.

Surgeon Simpson is under orders for foreign service.

Lieutenant-Colonels the Count d'Orsonneus, Turnbull, Maunsell, and Otter, Commandants of Military Schools in Canada, who have been undergoing instruction at Aldershot for some time past, have left Aldershot during the week.

Assistant-Commissary-General of Ordnance H. P. Moors, has assumed the duties of Senior Ordnance Store Officer, vice Deputy-Commissary-General H. A. Russell, C.B., ordered to Dublin.

Troop Serjeant-Major Darling, 15th Hussars, and Colour-Serjeant Brenchley, East Surrey Regiment, have been selected as Drill Instructors for the Cavalry and Infantry forces of the Colony of Victoria.

A meeting of those interested in the maintenance of the pack of Divisional Drag-hounds was held at the Officers' Club on Tuesday. It was resolved that the pack be maintained. A statement of the hunt accounts has been issued by the hon. secretary, Lieutenant Carter, R.H.A., which shows that a sum of £175 has been subscribed by the officers of the Division for the support of the pack during the past twelve months. This amount was subscribed mainly by the mounted branches, the Royal Artillery alone giving £78. Lieutenant-General Sir Frederick Fitz-Wygram, Bart., who is a firm supporter of all the sports and amusements in the command, subscribed £15.

Reviews.

History of the 1st Battalion, Princess Louise's "Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders." By Lieut.-Cols. Robley and Aubin. (Murray and St. Leger, Cape Town.)

The history of this regiment, so well known as the "91st," has been compiled from the regimental records, and dates back from the raising of the regiment in 1794. It appears that this was accomplished by the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Huntley, the Earl of Breadalbane, and Thomas Graham, of Balgowan, at the express wish of George III. A letter of service was granted in February, 1794, and in the following month it was decided that the establishment of the regiment should consist of 1,112 officers and men, including two lieutenant-colonels. Duncan Campbell, of Lochnell, a captain in the Foot Guards, was appointed lieutenant-colonel commandant of the regiment, and assumed his command at Stirling on April 15 in the same year. At that time the regiment was in daily expectation of being ordered on foreign service. This was accomplished on May 5, 1795, when it embarked at Spithead as part of the joint expedition, under Major-General Clarke, to South Africa, to fight against the Dutch. The compilers of this record, anxious that its readers should properly understand the position of affairs at this time, introduce a very interesting extract from Theal's well-known history of the Cape Colony. We cannot afford space sufficient to accompany the writers of this record throughout the various services which the gallant 91st rendered to its country during the most eventful periods of the Military history of England. There is, however, one point in the history of the 91st Highlanders at which it becomes necessary to pause for a moment, in order to record the most glorious example that was ever afforded of self-denial and obedience to discipline. On January 7, 1852, the troopship Birkenhead, of 1,400 tons, commanded by Master-Commandant Robert Salmond, sailed from the coast of Cork, bound for the Cape of Good Hope, with detachments from ten regiments, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Seton, of the 74th Highlanders. Of the soldiers, a detachment, under Captain Wright, belonged to the 91st Highlanders. On a most perfectly quiet night, about 6 o'clock in the evening, the sea calm, with scarcely a breath of wind, and the stars shining brightly, the Birkenhead struck heavily on a sunken rock, in twelve fathoms of water, and in a very short interval of time it became clear that few, if any, could be saved. Everything that could be done was tried, but without avail. Colonel Seton at once comprehended the situation, and determined, without hesitation, to do what brave men and British soldiers ought to do under such circumstances. He impressed upon the other officers the necessity of preserving silence and discipline among the men. He then ordered the soldiers to draw up on both sides of the quarter-deck. The men obeyed, as if about to undergo an inspection. A party was told off to work the pumps, another to assist the sailors in lowering the boats, and another to throw the horses overboard. Every one, says Captain Wright, who escaped, did as was directed; "all received their orders, and had them carried out as if the men were embarking, instead of going to the bottom. There was only this difference, that I never saw an embarkation conducted with such little noise and confusion." The situation became more critical, the rush of water putting out the fires, but the soldiers remained quietly in their places, while Colonel Seton stood in the gangway with his sword drawn, seeing the women and children safely passed into the cutter provided for them. This was speedily effected, and she lay off about 150 yards from the sinking ship. In ten minutes after she first struck she broke in two at the foremast, it and the funnel falling over to the starboard side, crushing many, and throwing into the water those who were endeavouring to clear the paddle-box boat. But the men kept their places, though many of them were mere lads, only a few months in the service. The ship now began to sink rapidly, and those who remained on board clustered on the poop, all without the least disorder. At last the sailing Captain Salmond advised all who could swim to jump overboard and make for the boats. But Colonel Seton impressed upon the men that if they did so they would be sure to swamp the boats, and send the women and children to the bottom. He therefore asked them to keep their places, and to a man they obeyed. There now remained but a few moments to spare. The officers grasped each other's hands, bidding farewell. In a moment more the ship again broke up, and the hundreds who bravely stood to their places were plunged with the sinking wreck into the sea. Those who could swim struck out for the shore, but few ever reached it. Of 631 souls on board, 438 were drowned and 193 saved. Not a woman or child was lost. Those last few words speak eloquently of the heroic conduct of those who perished in the Birkenhead. The compilers of this record of the 91st Highlanders have devoted a good deal of time to the task they undertook; but nevertheless there are a great many clerical and typographical errors which obscure the sense of the passages they refer to. This, however, is generally the case in books published in India and the Colonies. We also observe that there is no list of Colonels, or of the officers at any one time. Also, the accounts of services at the Cape, evidently taken from local sources of information, are very circumstantial and magnify very small affairs into "battles;" while services in the Peninsula are passed over, or the descriptions are meagre, and sometimes inaccurate. These are errors which can be easily corrected in a second edition, which probably will be soon asked for.

CAVALRY MANŒUVRES AT BRÜCK.

The Armeeblatt of September 25 says:—"The recent Austrian Cavalry Manœuvres at Brück have shown that the prestige which that arm of the Austrian service has always enjoyed is still unimpaired. We have as yet received only the details of the movements which were executed on September 18, but so far they fully bear out that view, whilst they at the same time proved that, as a body of troops, the Austrian Cavalry possess a cohesion which speaks well for their previous training. On the day in question, at 8.45 a.m., the cavalry division engaged, of a total strength of 4,000 sabres, had taken up a position north of the Gaishof, with its front facing north. The regiments were massed in one body-line, the batteries being posted on the left wing. Three squadrons and two-thirds of a battery (four guns) had been sent forward previously to serve as a marked foe, so that 27 squadrons and two and a third batteries were in the front. The Emperor, accompanied by the King of Spain and a brilliant suite, arrived punctually at 9, and rode down the front. As the marked foe for the second movement (three squadrons and two guns) remained on the parade-ground, the division for both manœuvres was reduced to a strength of 24 squadrons and 12 guns, which had received the following instruction for the first movement on that day:—'A division of cavalry, pushing forward towards Zurndorf, past Brück, to reconnoitre, on receiving the intelligence that strong hostile cavalry detachments, with artillery, have occupied Zurndorf and Gattendorf, has concentrated at Brück, and is marching upon Parendorf. It is supposed that reconnaisances have been made.' The divisional commander (Major-General Prince Croy) detached three squadrons and one battery as an advanced guard, which had to move through Parendorf and along the railway, and led the division in double columns of brigade round to the northern entrance. Arrived there, he received the following intelligence:—'According to information received, a strong body of hostile cavalry, with artillery, is advancing from Zurndorf from the north of the railway, and may at this moment have reached the Sieben Jochhügel. The divisional commander has resolved to attack the enemy, and to repulse him.' The commander, having reconnoitred the position, and seen the marked opponent advance north of the railway in the direction of Parendorf, placed his batteries and one regiment at Klein-Neurisse, marched with the remainder half to the left in the direction of Potzneusiedl, and then, outflanking the enemy, turned about, so that one brigade formed the first line, the second regiment of the column the second line, the latter seizing the opportunity of at once attacking the enemy in flank and rear. The third line (the regiment at the battery) also participated in the attack. After a short rest, the division was marched towards Neudorf for the second movement, which was to be carried out as follows:—'A division of cavalry advancing over Neudorf and Parendorf to reconnoitre, on receiving the intelligence that a large hostile body of cavalry, coming from Oedenburg, has reached Winden, has concentrated at Neudorf to oppose the enemy, and is now on its march to Parendorf.' The divisional commander (Major Count Liechtenberg) marched the division, the brigades, in double-columns following each other, with the battalions between the brigades, and had advanced with the tête as far as the quarries of Uskopolje, when he received the following information:—'Intelligence has been received here according to which about 24 hostile squadrons with artillery are marching from Goysz upon Parendorf, and that at this moment the tête of its main force may have reached the railway.' The divisional commander soon after observed the marked opponent advance in fighting order from Parendorf towards Neudorf. He posted his batteries along the high road; the first regiment of the first brigade (second line), was pushed forward north of the road as an offensive Staffee (?), in the direction of the Parendorf Railway Station; the second regiment of the first and the first regiment of the second forming the first line (in formation of columns), and the second regiment the third line to the left. This formation was executed so promptly, that the enemy, attacked in front and at both flanks, was completely surrounded. This ended the manœuvres of the first day, and the troops arrived in their cantonment and bivouacs at 1 p.m. The movements of the cavalry engaged were made in a style and a precision deserving of the highest praise. The horse batteries of the 3rd and 4th Regiments of Artillery were as splendidly horsed and drilled, as they were in an excellent condition for manœuvring, and it is stated that their performances on September 18 gave the greatest satisfaction to the Emperor. On Monday following that day, divisional tactics were practised, and on Wednesday there were again manœuvres in the presence of the Emperor, the troops defiling before his Majesty at their close."

The Army.

2nd Life Guards. Her Majesty has approved the appointment of Major Viscount Downe as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, K.G., on his assumption of the command of a division of the Bengal Army. Lord Downe will be seconded, a step going through the regiment.

6th Dragoons. Capt. Cross, Lieut. Rant, Ridingmaster Hughes, and a draft of 54 men are en route to Natal in H.M.S. Orontes, to join head-quarters. Lieut. Des Vœux is ordered home from India, to relieve Lieut. Jones at the depôt.

9th Lancers. Lieut. Johnson has been detailed for duty at the regimental depôt, for two years.

15th Hussars. Capt. Walker, late of the regt., has succeeded to a baronetcy, by the death of his father, Sir James Walker, of Sand Hutton, and Beverley Hall, Yorkshire.

18th Hussars. The regt. will move from the Curragh Camp to Dublin as follows, and be quartered in the Royal Barracks:—Three troops on the 22nd inst., the head-quarters and two troops on the 23rd, and three troops on the 26th; the detachment and families at Longford on Nov. 1, by rail.

21st Hussars. The regt. moves from Dublin as follows:—One troop on the 19th inst. for Cahir, two troops on the 22nd, the head-quarters and one troop on the 23rd, also for Cahir; two troops to Limerick on the 25th, one troop for Waterford on the 23rd, and one troop for Clonmel on the 26th. Major the Hon. H. G. L. Crichton is about to retire from the service. The Morning Post says:—"Major Crichton has been, it is understood, appointed to the vacant colonelcy of the Hampshire Yeomanry Cavalry. Viscount Eversley is the honorary colonel of the regiment, which has been lately in a very week state, only about 100 men remaining in the corps. The disbandment of the regiment was lately mooted, but it is now believed that under the experienced command of Major Crichton this historic Hampshire regiment will promptly have a large accession of recruits, and become one of the most efficient of the few remaining Yeomanry regiments in this country."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

Major L. Downes, Capt. Instructor at the Royal Gun Factories at Woolwich, completes his five years' service in that appointment on December 31 next, but has been specially granted an extension of his term until April 1 next. Major Downes has also passed through the Advanced Class of Artillery, and the Staff College.

Major G. A. French, C.M.G., who recently vacated the appointment of Inspector of Warlike Stores at Devonport, has been appointed to the command of No. 1 Baty. 1st Brig., Welsh Division, R.A., stationed at Pembroke Dock.

Lieut.-Col. A. S. Hunter has been permitted by the Secretary of State for India to retain his appointment as Director of Garrison Instruction in India for a further period of two years from the date of the expiry of his present tenure, viz., to July, 1885.

The following appears in Bombay General Orders:—"The under-mentioned officer is allowed furlough to Europe for one year and 133 days, with the necessary subsidiary leave—Col. M. W. Willoughby, S.C., Secretary to Government, Military, Marine, and Ecclesiastical Departments. Col. B. H. Pottinger, R.A., is appointed to act as Secretary to Government, during the absence of Col. Willoughby."

"Ubique" writes:—"You will greatly oblige many subalterns and captains of the Royal Artillery, if you will give any information through your columns as to the intentions of the War Office with regard to the lieutenant-colonels Royal Artillery of the old Indian lists, whether or not they are to be retired under the five years' rule. A notice appeared in the Indian papers some months back to the effect that the Indian Government had consented to the formation of a retired Full-pay List for these officers, provided that no additional expense was incurred by it. It is difficult to see how such a List could be formed without incurring extra expense. And as no lieutenant-colonels have been retired from the Indian lists, it would seem that there is still some disagreement between the Home and Indian Governments on the subject. If these Indian lieutenant-colonels are not made to retire, the prospects of promotion in the Royal Regiment are decidedly gloomy. It is true that the subalterns now being promoted average only nine and a half years' service, which is much better than it used to be a few years ago; but it must be remembered that the average service of the infantry subalterns promoted (I leave out the cavalry, as they are always quicker) is only just nine years, and they have always the additional element of chance, viz., being in a lucky regiment, whereas we are always on a dead-level. The first step on the ladder of promotion is really of far greater importance to the Royal Artillery officers than any other branch, as subalterns R.A. have so few regimental appointments open to them, and even if they distinguish themselves in the field, reap no benefits unless they are on the verge of promotion. An examination of the Regimental List will show that the retirements of these Indian lieutenant-colonels are almost all we have to look forward to in the next two years, beyond the usual death vacancies, &c., as only one or two lieutenant-colonels on the Royal List will have to retire in that time. The scheme for reorganising the regiment seems to have fallen through again for a time. I am sure any R.A. officer in the junior ranks would endorse what your paper said some time ago about such a reorganisation being ardently desired by the majority of R.A. officers. Half the pleasure of promotion is taken away by the dread uncertainty as to what part of the earth, and which branch of the regiment, 'right and glory' will call us to serve in."

A correspondent writes from a foreign station:—"The 'golden bridge' which has been built for the late Deputy-Adjutant-General, R.A., in order to enable him to escape from the unhappy position in which he found himself at the Horse Guards, is satisfactory to all concerned. Sir Charles Arbuthnot's tenure of office has been the source of great disappointment to all Artillery officers. He not only failed to grapple with the question of Artillery reform, but such changes as he introduced into the administration of the Artillery were all of a distinctly retrograde character. His orders about exchanges, postings, and transfers of officers, arbitrary in themselves, were rendered tenfold more harmful by their one and all being steps backward, instead of a forward nature. The organisation of the Royal Artillery, as an officer of that corps once said, is like an 'Asiatic mystery.' It can only work at all by a wise distribution of patronage, and by a careful consideration of individual interests. It is this which Sir Charles Arbuthnot failed to realise, and which is the primary cause of his break-down. In his laudable efforts to suppress jobbery, he went too far in the direction of ruling by roster, and drawing hard and fast lines which were never to be broken through. Officers may be 'much of a muchness,' but in these days they cannot be driven as you would drive a flock of sheep, nor moved here, there, and everywhere, like pieces on a chess-board. If Sir Charles Arbuthnot's patronage has been colourless, if his reputation as an administrator has been shaken beyond recovery, if round men are found in square holes, if discontent has been and still is wide-spread and outspoken, it is because he has shirked responsibility where he should have assumed it, because he has held himself aloof from his colleagues, because he has studiously ignored public opinion, which he might have led, controlled, and used, and because he has persistently refused to take the advice fo those whom he knew he could trust to give him honest and disinterested help. I do not wish to cause pain to any one. I speak openly. There is no innuendo conveyed or implied in my language. It is meant to be straight and clear, and strike home. Horse-Guards officials, like other public servants, cannot expect immunity from criticism. They must be prepared to find their motives and conduct fully and freely discussed. They are the responsible advisers of his Royal Highness, by whom they are entrusted with the high interests of the Army, and when they fail to serve those interests, the Press equally fails in its duty, if it hesitates to say so. Sir Charles Arbuthnot failed because he went to extremes. Many men fail because they seek too much advice, his fault was that he did not take enough. Let the new Deputy-Adjutant-General take warning."

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

Capt. S. H. Exham succeeds Capt. and Brevet Lieut.-Col. W. North as adjutant of the corps at Chatham.

The following officers have left the School of Military Engineering for the purpose of visiting and inspecting the principal battle-fields of Europe—viz., Major H. Tovey, instructor in military history, strategy, and military law at the School of Military Engineering; Lieut. H. B. Mackay, Lieut. J. E. Edmonds, Lieut. A. D. G. Shelley, and Lieut. A. M. Chapman. They will on their return prepare special reports as to the spots visited.

The 30th Company, consisting of Major Edmondes, Lieut. Hayne, and 61 men arrived home on Saturday last, in H.M.S. Himalaya, from Gibraltar.

A court-martial has been sitting at Sheerness, for the trial of Qrmr.-Serjt. S. I. Rayner, foreman of works. The prisoner was arraigned on seven distinct charges of having, while foreman of the Royal Engineers works at the Isle of Grain, fraudulently certified that certain artificers, excavators, and labourers, for whom wages were claimed in the contractors' bills, were employed on such works for certain specified times, well knowing such statements to be false, thereby, in some of the cases, defrauding, and, in the remainder, intending to defraud, the public of various sums, amounting in the aggregate to upwards of £130. An eighth count charged him with having knowingly made a fraudulent statement that a bricklayer named Catling and a labourer named Green worked on an improvement to the ventilation of the magazine at Grain Fort for 15 hours, which was false, with intent thereby to defraud the public of the sum of £7 18s. 6d. It appeared that the prisoner had seen over 20 years' service, that he had risen to the highest rank to which a non-commissioned officer could attain, and he would in the course of a few months have been entitled to a pension of 2s. 9d. per day. Col. Le Mesurier said that, apart from these charges, he could give the prisoner as high a character as he could give any non-commissioned officer. The finding of the court and sentence will be promulgated in due course.

Scots Guards. Lieut. Bagot will return with the Marquis of Lorne from Canada, when he will resume duty with his regiment.

3rd Buffs (East Kent Regiment). Major Mackinnon, half-pay, late of the regiment, is allowed to retain his appointment as Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. for Musketry in India until March 31, 1884.

5th Northumberland Fusiliers. Major Thistlethwayte, 1st Batn., has applied for permission to retire.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. Major Blois, 1st Batn., joins the depôt for two years, relieving Major Jones. Capt. Winnington-Ingram, 2nd Batn., is ordered home from India to join the depôt for two years, in relief of Capt. Longbourne. Lieut. Newmarch, 2nd Batn., a candidate, attached to the 32nd Bengal N.I., is about to be appointed to the Bengal S.C. from Sept. 4, 1882.

8th King's (Liverpool Regiment). Lieut. Scales, 2nd Batn., is ordered home from India to join the depôt.

10th Lincolnshire Regiment. Lieut. Grant, 2nd Batn., is ordered home from India for duty at the depôt.

17th Leicestershire Regiment. Capt. Clarke, 2nd Batn., is ordered home from India to join the depôt.

18th Royal Irish Regiment. Col. Gregorie, C.B., who had command of the 2nd Batn. during the late campaign in Egypt, and under whose command the "Royal Irish" was specially mentioned by the General Officer commanding for its "dash, and the manner in which it closed with the enemy," has been appointed to command the 35th Regimental District at Chichester, vice Col. Shiffner, deceased. Col. Gregorie served through the whole of the Indian Mutiny as adjt. of the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers for which he received a medal with two clasps. The Commander-in-Chief in India has confirmed the sentence passed by a court-martial on Lieut. Parkyn, 1st Batn. Lieut. Parkyn's cheques on various banks were dishonoured, and he has been sentenced to be cashiered. Lieut. Loch, 1st Batn., a probationer, officiating wing-officer 1st Bengal N.I., is about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C. from Aug. 25, 1882.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Messrs. Mayer and Co., 149 New Bond Street, have just finished a handsome tablet, which is about to be placed in the Old Church at Ayr, to the memory of those who were killed in action or died during the time the regiment was employed in South Africa.

25th King's Own Borderers. Major Higgins, 1st Batn., is about to retire on a pension. In him the service loses a most earnest soldier, and the regiment a very popular officer. But what attractions has the Army for such men now? The Liverpool Courier says:—"The death is announced of the mother of Gen. Wolseley, widow of Major Wolseley, 25th Regiment. The General's father did not experience such rapid promotion as his son. We find in the old Army Lists the name of Capt. Garnet Wolseley, 25th, the date of his captain's commission being August 5, 1804. In 1826 we find him senior captain, with the brevet rank of major, and towards the end of that year he retired from the Army." Lieuts. Corfield and Hamilton, probationers—the former attached to the 2nd, the latter to the 25th Bengal N.I.—are about to be admitted to the Bengal S.C., from Feb. 18 and July 6, 1882, respectively.

32nd Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has approved of Capt. Turnbull being appointed to act temporarily as aide-de-camp to Major-Gen. the Hon. W. H. A. Feilding, commanding the 3rd Infantry Brigade at Aldershot.

ROYAL MARINES.

Capt. W. J. Adair, R.M.L.I., who not long since relinquished the adjutancy of the division at Portsmouth, and who is a son of Major-Gen. Sir Charles W. Adair, K.C.B., who recently vacated the post of Adjt.-Gen., has passed a very creditable examination for admission to the Staff College, his name standing ninth on the list in order of merit.

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. A stained-glass window has just been placed in the south aisle of Winchester Cathedral by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men serving or having served in the regiment, in memory of those who lost their lives in the Zulu, Afghan, Transvaal, and Egyptian campaigns, in all, 199 officers and men. Hannay, who has been employed as Aide-de-Camp to H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught at Aldershot, has been ordered to return to regimental duty on his Royal Highness vacating his appointment, and will not accompany him to India. It is stated to be in contemplation to move the regiment from Glasgow to Ireland. Medical Department. A correspondent writes:—"The blank outlook, as regards promotion, of surgeons-major of about 20 years' service is made most apparent in your very considerate article in the Army and Navy Gazette of July 28. Will you permit me to add a suggestion to those so ably advocated by you, which, I believe, would tend to relieve the congestion at the top of the list of surgeons-major now inevitable in the near future? My suggestion is that Medical officers, on attaining 20 years' service, should be permitted to retire on £365 a year for 12 months, their names being retained in their places, in italics, in the Army List, with the option of returning within that time without loss of service. Thus they would be placed in a position to test their capabilities and chances of success in civil practice, without taking the now irrevocable step of finally quitting the service, when, perhaps, a very short experience would have convinced them of the mistake they had made. The advantages may not seem so apparent to those not affected; but personally, and after having discussed the point with confrères similarly placed to myself, I feel confident that the privilege would be largely availed of, and would have the effect that many who are now deterred by the uncertainty of success would pass contentedly into civil life at an age when success might be expected. Of course, foreign service would be a difficulty, and certain regulations should be adopted. Thus, a Medical officer serving abroad might be granted a free passage home, on completing one-half his tour, with the proviso that, should he again come in on full pay, he would have to return and join at his own expense. On the other hand, an officer coming to the top of the Roster whilst temporarily retired should be called upon to 'sell or sail.'"

Commissariat and Transport Staff. The Secretary of State for War has, on the recommendation of the General Officer commanding the Woolwich District, set apart the necessary accommodation, and approved of special issues of fuel, light, and furniture, for the formation of a mess for the conductors at Woolwich.

Ordnance Store Department. The following changes in stations, &c., have lately taken place:—Assist.-Commissaries-Gen. of Ordnance C. Ralph to Woolwich Arsenal, and W. R. Mayo to Bermuda. Deputy-Assist.-Commissaries-Gen. of Ordnance R. T. Stainforth to Cape Town, to relieve F. B. Melliss; G. H. Everard has joined at Weedon, to relieve F. O. Leggett, who proceeds to Gibraltar, to relieve J. Jones; E. J. de Salis has been ordered from York to Chester.

Pay Department. A correspondent writes:—"Your friendly and unceasing efforts to bring about an improvement in the condition of the officers of the Army Pay Department has earned the gratitude of its members, while your article in the Army and Navy Gazette of the 13th inst. has suggested the following ideas to myself, and which I venture to submit for your consideration. The present constitution of the Army Pay Department is the result of the peculiar arrangement existing under Control, of which it formed a part. The latter evidently was framed on the plan of a regiment, with its combatant and non-combatants. The administrative and executive (Commissaries) officers were the corollary of the combatant portion, the pay officers of the non-combatants. Made a distinct Department in 1877, to be governed by it own officers, the latter were still retained very much in the inferior position that existed under Control; and thus because a novel and unwise organisation had been introduced under Control, the same was to be continued as nearly as possible, consistent with its altered condition, when a distinct and separate Department. One would have thought, as the duties of the Army Pay, Commissariat, and Ordnance were all, at least, of equal importance, that they would have been placed in equal positions as regards rank, pay, retirement, &c., as well for the sake of uniformity and simplicity as for those of expediency and justice. The members of the Department have reason to be dissatisfied at finding that those duties which gave importance and consequence to the Commissariat in former days bring inequality and inferiority to the Army Pay Department in the present, while those who would fain join it feel that in doing so they would accept an inferior, when a superior position is open to them. Is it reasonable to suppose that officers entering the Army would deliberately select regiments where the highest position attainable would be that of a captain or major, for corps half the strength in officers, or even less, where promotion to ranks of lieutenant-colonel and colonel is certain in one-half the time that would be needed in the other? Can it, therefore, be expected that candidates for the Army Pay Department will be found, when two other Departments exist in which a brighter present and a more successful future are open to them? No improvement, I fear, therefore, short of placing the Department on a par with the Commissariat and Ordnance, will kill discontent within, or attract recruits from without. Chief paymasters should be placed on exactly the same footing in all respects as deputy-commissary-generals, and Staff paymasters as assistant-commissary-generals, with promotion to rank of lieutenant-colonel, and so on, and an officer should be attached to the Staff of the Accountant-General at the War Office. The Army Pay Department has in this exalted official an able and energetic head, one who could, with his determination of character, place the Department in such a state of contentment as to earn the lasting gratitude of generations of Paymasters, while at the same time securing an amount of efficiency that would be a credit as well to his own administration as to the financial branch of the War Office."

The regiment is in a most flourishing condition, having now 530 men; with a splendid lot of recruits coming forward.

2nd West Yorkshire. The usual escorts were furnished by this regiment last week, on the occasion of the Royal visit to Huddersfield. A field-officer's escort of 100 men and 6 officers, under command of Major Edwards, assembled on Friday afternoon at Elland Bridge, and marched to Huddersfield, where billets were provided by the authorities. On Saturday, the escort paraded in review order, and received their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Albany with the customary salute. They remained on duty throughout the day, and at the close of the proceedings, about 5.30, formed up and saluted the Royal party as the carriage passed, a captain's escort, under Capt. Armitage, proceeding with their Royal Highnesses to Whitley Beaumont, some six miles from Huddersfield. The rest of the men were marched back to their troop head-quarters, which they reached about 9 o'clock, having been on duty about 12 hours. On Monday, a travelling escort, under Lieut. Wheatley, paraded at Huddersfield at 9 a.m., and marched to Whitley, whence they escorted H.R.H. the Duke to the town, where his Royal Highness attended a grand Masonic gathering. An hour later a second detachment, under Lieut. Morris, marched to Whitley, and escorted H.R.H. the Duchess to the railway station at Huddersfield. It is understood that their Royal Highnesses expressed to Sir Henry Edwards, who was in attendance, their great satisfaction at the manner in which the duties of the escort were performed; and Major-Gen. Cameron, C.B., whilst the troops were waiting for the Royal party, paid the men a high compliment upon their turn-out and appearance.

THE VOLUNTEERS.

11th Middlesex Rifles. We have much pleasure in publishing the following letter, in justice to a most deservedly popular and very zealous officer:—"Your remarks on Col. Gore Browne's retirement from the command of the 11th Middlesex Volunteers are most true. That the service will sustain a loss cannot be doubted; but it is hardly just to the former commanding officer, Col. Malet (for many years in the Grenadier Guards), to comment on the then state of the regiment to his disadvantage. I knew the regiment well, both before and after Col. Malet took over the command, and I know that during the years he commanded it wonderful progress was made, and from being a kind of club, Col. Malet made it a regiment of soldiers. I believe every senior officer on the Staff in London will confirm this. I am certain you will be glad to correct an impression, unintentional on your part, but likely to cause unmerited pain." Everybody who knows Col. Malet will, we feel sure, endorse the views of our correspondent. A better soldier never entered the Volunteer ranks, and it is to be regretted that his connection with the service should have been such a short one, for the force can ill afford to lose men of his stamp.

A POSSIBLY HARD CASE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In these days, when officers are discharged under age clauses, I wish to bring to light what may be hard cases. Into several regiments serving in Egypt during the late campaign were brought majors from half-pay. Now, suppose I am senior captain of my regiment, that a major retires, and instead of my being promoted the step is absorbed, as it naturally would be, I in time, having lost my chance, put in my 20 years, and so am retired on £200 a year; my more fortunate friend from half-pay serves on "in what I should consider my place," and either retires on £300, or perhaps even commands the regiment. Surely, Sir, this never could be intended; or is it fair that, because a man is otherwise fortunate to go on active service, that thereby he loses £100 pension? But such undoubtedly will be the case with some officers. Before such does happen, I trust something will be done; either now promote as supernumeraries in their own regiments these senior captains, or give them promotions into other regiments; the former for choice, as I know it is not a very popular thing to promote a man from one regiment into another.—I am, &c., Fair Play.

A committee has been appointed by the Lords of the Admiralty to inquire into the present system of nursing in the Royal Navy, as now carried out in the several hospitals. Admiral Sir A. H. Hoskins has been selected chairman, and the report, it is anticipated, will result in the increase of the staff of female nurses in the generality of the above institutions.

MILITIA COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

"H. F. Morgan, late 28th Regiment," writes:—"In the law paper at the examination held on the 19th and 20th ult., the candidates are asked to frame charges for a man who leaves his Militia regiment when out for training, and enlists into the Regular forces. In Boughey's 'Military Law,' which is one of the text-books, at page 167, sec. 13, it is distinctly stated the man should be charged with 'fraudulent enlistment;' but O'Dowd, at page 58 of his book, 'Hints to Courts-Martial,' says that a man belonging to a Militia regiment not permanently embodied, if he leaves it, and enlists into the Regular forces, shall be charged with "making a false answer." O'Dowd's book is not a text-book, and it will be hard on candidates who have answered the question in accordance with the views of Col. Boughey, whose book (as I have before stated) is a text-book, if they receive no marks from the examiner because his opinion coincides with that of the Deputy Judge-Advocate-General of the Forces. In the fortification paper, I notice that question 7 is set to be drawn on a scale of $\frac{1}{450}$. This is evidently a printer's error, as the size of the paper supplied renders it impracticable. Much valuable time was lost by several of the candidates in endeavouring to solve the mystery, and some of them, to show that they could have done it if a proper scale had been given, did the sketch on a reduced scale. A great deal of the three hours allotted to this subject was thereby lost, and the other answers were consequently not as complete as they might have been. I am personally interested in this matter, as one of my sons was up as a candidate and at his last 'shot.' I trust these remarks may meet the eyes of the examiners, and that they will kindly excuse my bringing them to notice."

THE INDIAN ORDNANCE CORPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—The case of the Indian Lieutenant-Colonels (Indian Lists, R.A.) being again under consideration, and the campaign between the War Office and the India Office being once more resumed—with some prospect, let us hope, of a more satisfactory result than the finale of a theological or political discussion, nothing—it would be well to suggest respectfully to the powers that be to revise once more the scale of pensions under which the officers of the late Indian Artillery can now retire. There is the retirement under the extra-annuity scheme, which seems to have been framed with the object of preventing any officer ever being eligible for retirement, and it appears simply absurd that an officer who, with seven years put in as a major, can retire on a pension with extra annuity, can only, if promoted to lieutenant-colonel, retire on a very much less sum. Thus, Lieut.-Col. B, with 27 years' service, can only retire on £365 per annum (under the length-of-service scheme); while Major A, with 26½ years' service, having been seven years a major, can retire on about £500 per annum. This seems an anomaly. Withdraw the prohibitive clauses as to grades, and give the extra annuity, say, after 25 years' service, to every one, no matter what his rank, and there will be a much more even and rapid flow of promotion than at present, and an officer will not, as now, dread promotion which only entails a commencement of another period of service before a fair pension can be obtained. In one word, does it not seem somewhat unjust that an officer of junior rank and a younger soldier can obtain a better pension on retirement than an officer senior to him both in rank and length of service. Some compensation must, of course, be offered the Indian lieutenant-colonels for compulsory retirement after five years (I mean those now eligible, not in the future). This compensation, coupled with the scheme above proposed of the extra annuity after 25 years' service, would soon cause a sure run of promotion, and speedily lead to the much-desired decrease of the old Indian R.A. lists altogether. Since writing the above, I have read the able article in the issue for Oct. 6 of your valuable paper. You might have gone further, and touched on the position of the majors as well as lieutenant-colonels. The more one hears, and sees, and thinks, the more sure one is of the absurdity of the prohibitive clauses with regard to the extra annuity in the different ranks, and the more sure one is that, if the Warrant is simply altered to the few words, "An officer, after 25 years' service, can retire on the Indian pension of his rank and extra annuity," &c., the matter would be settled. In return for this concession, compulsorily retire the lieutenant-colonels after five years' service, and there will be no more grumbling either in the old R.A. List as to supersession, or the Indian Lists as to retirement. With the true Britisher's privilege of a growl, I am, &c.,

A Wanderer.

A CORRECTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Seeing in the Army and Navy Gazette of Sept. 30, a paragraph stating the losses sustained by the 31st Regiment on the Sutlej in 1845-46, I venture to send a list of the casualties of the 50th, the other European regiment in the 1st (Sir H. Smith's) Division. Out of a strength of 35 officers and 796 men, 35 officers and 520 men were returned as killed and wounded; two officers were untouched, but two were wounded in the first and last actions. The medical attendant on the Staff of Prince Waldemar of Prussia, Dr. Hoffmeister, was killed when advancing with the regiment on the entrenchments at Ferozeshah. Three months after, the regiment sustained a further loss by the blowing down of the barracks at Loodianah in a hurricane; 57 men, 14 women, and 20 children were killed, and 126 men, four women, and five children were injured.—I am, &c., One of the Old 50th.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Henry W. Norman, K.C.B., C.I.E., has been appointed Governor of Jamaica, in succession to Sir Anthony Musgrave. Sir Henry Norman was born in 1826. He was Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. of the Delhi Field Force throughout the Mutiny; was secretary to the Government of India in the Military Department from 1862 to 1870; Military Member of the Supreme Council of India, 1870 to 1877; and has been a member of the Indian Council since 1878. This is Sir Henry Norman's first colonial appointment.

It is ordered that in future plugged common or double shells used for practice by the Royal Artillery are to be filled with water in lieu of sand, and plugged with the wood plugs representing time fuses; the metal plugs formerly used are to be returned to store. Palliser shells are also to be filled with water, and the base or gas check plug is to be well lubricated and screwed home.

In accordance with instructions, the only soldiers serving with their regiments who may be exempted from drawing rations in kind are men employed as waiters or servants in the officers' mess; those employed as officers' servants when their masters live at an inconvenient distance from the barracks; employed non-commissioned officers and men when their employment is of such a nature as to render drawing rations in kind difficult or seriously inconvenient to them. These men may be struck out of mess, under the authority of the General officer in local command, and may receive the commuted allowance.

The Earl of Aberdeen, on Saturday afternoon, unveiled a portrait of Dr. John Anderson, late Superintendent of Woolwich Arsenal, by George Reid, R.S.A., in the Free Church, Woodside, near Aberdeen. The portrait was subscribed for by 1,700 of the inhabitants of Woodside, in recognition of Dr. Anderson's munificent gift of a library of 9,000 volumes.

The naval pension for Lieutenants, Royal Navy, of £50 per annum, vacant by the death of Retired Com. W. C. Nowell, on Sept. 15, has been awarded to Retired Com. Thomas S. Dickinson, from that date.

It is not generally known, but it is, nevertheless, true, that were war to break out, we have not enough lieutenants on the Active List for the requirements of the service. Were four battle-ships commissioned at once, they would absorb nearly all the lieutenants on half-pay. Were it necessary to commission every available ship, there would be no lieutenants available. Under these circumstances the Admiralty have arranged to sweep all lieutenants holding home appointments out of their present billets, and to fill these by officers called up from the Retired List, should a naval war necessitate a sudden expansion of the Fleet.—Hampshire Telegraph.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 20, 1883.

OUR Press is very high and mighty in tone and morals, when it is lecturing Egyptians on the virtues of economy and purity of administration, and on the wickedness of jobbery, and of other vices of their official life. Now, let us suppose such a case as this,—pure hypothesis, indeed. There is a rebellion, let us say, in some outlying dependency of ours in the East, and our Government applies to an Egyptian official in its employ to select good officers to organise the forces which are to put down the rising. In due time there appears on the scene an Egyptian, who once commanded a native regiment abroad, and has retired from the service. He is made Chief of the Staff to the British General. Under him there is an Egyptian who was once in the Egyptian Guards, which he left years before, owing to private affairs. He has never seen any service at all. The next is an old Egyptian, who saw a little service more than a quarter of a century before, and who has long left the Army. Then there are three or four others, in better health, but with no particular qualifications for the field, and utterly ignorant, with the exception of the interpreter, of the language of the soldiers they command and of the country in which they are to serve. The Chief of the Staff sets out, with a great flourish of trumpets, and with a costly equipment, escorts, camels, horses, camp, &c., at the expense of our Government, for the seat of war, and his following in due course appear at the Head-quarters of the British General. He is at once declared to be incompetent, and pressure is brought to bear against him. He is deposed, and the Egyptian Chief of the Staff is named General-in-Chief in his place. The Egyptian immediately pops the ex-Guards Lieutenant into the post of Chief of the Staff, with the rank and pay of Colonel. He there remains for month after month, "organising," as the British Pasha had been doing; and then the racing season sets in, and there is more delay, and all this time the enemy are in possession of the country. At last, the Egyptian General sets out from his Head-quarters in a steamer to pick up his army; but his Egyptian officers have all gone away, except three, one of whom is left at Head-quarters. The old Bimbashee having made a little trip to Head-quarters, finds the country does not agree with him, and is invalided, let us say to Simla, where he passes his time on his pay and allowances. Another is on sick leave in England, ditto, ditto. A third is also on sick leave in England, ditto, ditto. So the Egyptian General has to trust chiefly to certain Germans, who have been engaged to serve with the expeditionary army. Now, let us try to imagine the indignation which would be aroused in our minds by such a proceeding forced on us by the Egyptian Government, especially when we learned that the pay of these officers is enormously greater than that of the British officers of similar rank, and that as yet there has been nothing done to put down the rebellion. But if the communication we printed last week from Cairo be true, the parallel case seems to have arisen in the Soudan. Hicks Pasha has been at Khartoum many months, and for a considerable time he has been General-in-Chief of the Soudan, the Egyptian Pasha at Khartoum having been sent about his business. We believe Hicks Pasha to be a gallant, honest soldier, and do not attribute to him any blame for what has not been done, or any share in the outcry against the Egyptian Pasha, nor is it his fault that his officers have "sickened," but we do blame him for not insisting on the retirement of those officers who have gone home invalided, and on the appointment of Englishmen as robust as the Germans who are with the troops in the front, in lieu of the absentees. His Chief of the Staff, Farquhar (Colonel in the Khedive's Army), is with him, on board his steamer going up to join the Army, Colonel de Coetlogon is at Khartoum, Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. J. Colborne is at Cairo invalided, Major Morton is on sick leave in England, Captain Walker is on sick leave in England, Major Evans (interpreter) is with Hicks Pasha. Surely that is not a very creditable state of affairs, and an Egyptian may well put his tongue in his cheek when he reads the homilies of our best possible instructors. Neither General Stephenson nor Sir E. Wood has anything to do with the direction of the Army of the Soudan.

The Secretary of State for War has it in contemplation to introduce some important changes into the system of paying the non-commissioned officers and men of the Army, with a view of relieving company officers of a most trying and responsible duty, and enabling them to devote more time to promoting the military efficiency of their men.

It is evident by the hospital returns which have been received at head-quarters from the principal Military stations, that something must soon be done to check the ravages of the disease which was kept within bounds for many years by the operations of the Contagious Diseases Acts, now in abeyance. A most alarming state of things is disclosed. The efficients of our weak regiments are becoming fewer, while the hospitals are crowded. In fact, should the number of sick from this cause go on increasing as hitherto, large additions will have to made to the hospital accommodation and Medical Staff at all stations. Nor is this all. The number of men in hospital with the disease is no measure of the extent to which it may really exist, and it is feared that many men, to their great injury, persistently conceal their disease from the medical officers. The extent to which the efficiency of the Army is impaired by recent legislation in these matters, is shown by the fact that at least 7 per cent. of the 84th York and Lancaster Regiment have been left behind in hospital at Aldershot, suffering from venereal, on the departure of the regiment for Bermuda.

A number of the new experimental rifles have been issued to the 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade, at Aldershot, for trial and report. These trials will be most exhaustive, and will be carried out in all weathers, and under all conditions of service, in accordance with instructions which have been issued.

It is generally understood that Lieutenant-General Lord Chelmsford will accept the Governorship of Malta, as it will save him from compulsory retirement for non-employment, to which he would become liable on July 16, 1884. His Lordship, however, has never pushed his claims for anything.

The statement which was recently published in Vanity Fair regarding the conduct of the Port Surgeon at Aden, who is charged with neglecting his duty, and unduly detaining the Italian mail steamer China, is untrue in every particular. We regret that so garbled a version of the actual facts of the case should have been furnished to our contemporary, and accepted without more inquiry than appears to have been made into the truth of the allegations. It is not the duty of the Port Surgeon at Aden to visit ships between sundown and sunrise. The China was visited, according to regulations, as early as possible on the morning after its arrival in harbour. As soon as Surgeon-Major Colson reached the ship to perform his official duty, he was grossly and unwarrantably insulted by a civilian passenger on board. We are informed that a Field Officer in the Indian Army identified himself to a certain extent with the perpetrator of the insult. This officer has been communicated with by the Resident at Aden, to whom the whole matter was reported, and has been called on to apologise for his misbehaviour. We are further informed that Surgeon-Major Colson's conduct met with the thorough approval of the Resident, whose only regret was that the quarantine rules prevented the detention of the China, and the prompt punishment of the offender.

The total number of men of the British Army in India who had, up to latest accounts, extended their Army service with the bounty was:—Cavalry, 272; Artillery, 648; Royal Engineers, 10; Infantry, 3,189; grand total, 4,119.

In the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882, there are certain articles printed in italics, showing thereby that they "are temporary only, and their provisions will cease to have effect so soon as the conditions contained in them have been fulfilled." Among these are the articles relating to the granting of retired full pay to officers of 30 years' service, or in case of ill-health, of 25 years' service. These articles apply only to officers whose first permanent commissions are dated prior to October 1, 1877, and consequently they must, sooner or later, die a natural death; but already, owing to other and oftentimes preferable modes of retirement being under this Warrant open to many of the officers who are qualified for retired full pay, there is a great falling-off in the number of applications for this mode of retirement. And whereas before July 1, 1881, on account of the sum allowed for these retirements being limited, there were always several officers waiting for vacancies on the Retired Full-Pay List, we believe that at the present time funds are beginning to accumulate in the hands of the Financial Secretary, owing to lack of applicants for retirement. Thus it would appear that any officer qualified by the necessary length of service has only to apply for the retired full pay of his rank, and his application will be immediately granted.

Under instructions from the Horse Guards, it has been notified, with reference to G.O. 94, of 1883, that only such men as extend their service to complete 12 years with the colours come under Army Circular 111, of 1883, which entitles them to the £2 gratuity.

It will be seen from the announcement of the examination to be held next month for cadetships at the Royal Military College, which we published last week, that the authorities are beginning at last to see that something ought to be done towards obtaining more candidates for commissions in Cavalry regiments. To this end, 15 out of the 112 cadetships to be competed for are to be given to 15 of the successful competitors who are willing to serve in the Cavalry. This is, at any rate, a step in the right direction, and after a time, when the cadets who enter the College as Cavalry candidates begin to pass out and receive their commissions, the Cavalry regiments will doubtless feel the benefit of the course now adopted for the first time. But meanwhile, what is to be done? Vacancies are occurring daily, and there is no one to fill them. The unsuccessful candidates at the last Militia examination have recently been called upon to accept commissions in the Cavalry, but we fear the offer has been but poorly responded to. We must hope, however, that as the authorities are evidently now alive to the unsatisfactory state of affairs, they will devise some means of keeping things going until the first batches of the new order of cadets, who enter for Cavalry only, are beginning to pass out from Sandhurst and take their places in the vacancies they are certain to find waiting for them.

With reference to our former remarks on the condition of the Army Medical Department, we wish to draw attention to the extraordinary state of affairs now existing in Ireland. It will hardly be credited that for an Army of some 35,000 men there is but one administrative officer, Deputy-Surgeon-General Fraser, now acting as Surgeon-General. All the circles are being administered by executive officers, and strange to say, in two instances the officiating Principal Medical Officers are men who have been passed over as unfit for promotion to the rank of Brigade-Surgeon, while in another case the officiating Principal Medical Officers are men who have been passed over as unfit for promotion to the rank of Brigade-Surgeon, while in another case the official Principal Medical Officer is junior to most of the Surgeons-Major in the circle he has charge of. The feeling of discontent is now more prevalent than ever, in consequence of the shortness of home service, and an officer who embarks for foreign service this month will be found in the Army List of January last year as serving in Bengal, thus showing that home service is now under two years' duration. It seems most unfair for men who served through the two phases of the Afghan war, or through the Zulu and Boer wars, and were in many cases six and seven years abroad, to have to go on foreign service after less than two years at home, while officers who were only three or four months in Egypt are put to the bottom of the roster, and get another tour in England. Unification was to have given medical officers a longer time at home, so at least its advocates urged, but instead, the tour of foreign to home service is in the ratio of six to two, rather contrary to the promises held out by the reform party.

Within the last few months two officers, both of whom were disqualified by age and service, and consequently ineligible for admission to the Army Pay Department, under Article 366 of the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882, and Royal Warrant, Army Circulars, of May 18, 1883, have been accepted as candidates, and one has been appointed to the Department and the other is "on probation." It certainly is a new departure for Royal Warrants to be issued, only to be set aside when it suits the convenience of those in office to ignore them.

It is probable that an endeavour will be made next Session to secure a Committee of the House of Commons to inquire into the whole question of drunkenness in the Army. Evidence will, of course, be taken by the Committee as to the best means of affording soldiers more rational amusement in barracks, so as to wean them from the sinks of iniquity which surround most of our barracks. It is fully time that the subject was gone into in earnest. Various attempts have been made to induce soldiers to spend their spare time in barracks, but they have not hitherto met with that success which might have been hoped for. If the question was taken up in a practical manner, and the country would act with liberality, there can be no doubt but that much might be done to stamp out the evil consequences of drunkenness among the rank and file.

Notwithstanding the excellent work done by Lieutenant-General Sir John Lefroy, K.C.M.G., during his period of service as Governor of Bermuda, we understand that difficulties will arise at the Colonial Office to prevent his further employment in the Colonial service, the Governorship of Bermuda being a semi-military appointment, and not giving the holders of it any recognised claim on the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The trials of the Weldon range-finder by the Artillery and Infantry, which have been going on at Aldershot since the beginning of the year, have been brought to a conclusion, at least for the present. It is certainly high time that the question of range-finders, on which the fighting power of our small Army so much depends, was satisfactorily decided, so that the troops might be provided with the best instrument.

A well-informed correspondent, writing to us from Berlin, says:—"A feeling is gaining ground in military circles here that the long-expected war with Russia is not nearly so distant as is generally expected. It is said that as soon as the old Emperor closes his eyes, a pretext will and must be found to settle the question of military supremacy. The Russians are already doing their best to bring matters to a speedy crisis. German officers, who have been sent to Russia on various missions, complain that they are systematically insulted by Russian officers, but that they have strict orders to take no notice of the same."

It is in contemplation to shortly issue a forage-cap of a new pattern to all the mounted branches and some of the dismounted corps, the present cap having been found most unsuitable for active service. The new cap, though the pattern has not yet been sealed, will be a modification of the present Infantry glengarry, which has proved to be a most serviceable forage cap in the field.

Under the Royal Warrant of 1848, the Regimental Committees were empowered, on foreign stations, to make an additional charge of 3 per cent. on the prices charged by tradesmen for necessaries, for the purpose of forming a contingent fund, to be applicable solely to meet the losses which unavoidably arose from deterioration in store, insects, damp, or other causes. On the regulations being altered, the War Office called in the several balances, which amounted to the sum of £1,298 6s. 3d. It was proposed that this amount should be transferred to the Exchequer. The War Office, however, objected to this proceeding, the Secretary of State for War expressing the opinion that, having regard to the circumstances under which the fund had been accumulated, it ought to be devoted in some way to the benefit of the soldier. With this view, it has been decided to treat the fund in the same way as that arising from the unclaimed balances of deceased soldiers, which is invested in Consols, and the interest utilised in meeting the wants of the widows and children of soldiers dying in the service.

Boadicea, Capt. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Noel Salmon, V.C., was at Simon's Bay up to Oct. 15. The Merlin left on Sept. 23 for the China station.

Canada, Capt. F. Durrant, having on board Prince George of Wales, arrived at Halifax, Nova Scotia, on Friday last, and will remain till Oct. 20, and then proceed to Bermuda

Constance, Capt. Doughty, was at Callao on Sept. 2.

Cruiser, Com. Darwin, left Gibraltar on Oct. 15.

Euryalus, Capt. Hastings, C.B., flagship of Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., was at Zanzibar on Oct. 18.

Fantôme, Com. Grey, was at Jackmel on Sept. 15.

Himalaya, Capt. H. St. L. B. Palliser, arrived at Portsmouth on Saturday morning from Malta and Gibraltar with time-expired men, and left on Thursday for Burmuda and the West Indies with troops. On her return she will take out new crews for the Superb and Carysfort.

Kingfisher, Com. R. H. Thornton, was at Coquimbo on Sept. 2.

Lord Warden, Capt. Kennedy, arrived in Lerwick Harbour, Shetland, on Wednesday, from Queensferry. The visit of the Lord Warden is to endeavour to obtain boys from the islands of Orkney and Shetland for service in the Royal Navy, and she is to be engaged for about three weeks in this work, during which time she will be stationed at Lerwick, and afterwards at Orkney. She will then proceed back to her anchorage at Queensferry.

Mallard, Lieut. and Com. Littledale, was at Port Royal, Jamaica, making good defects and preparing for sea, on Sept. 25.

Moorhen, Lieut. and Com. Corfe, arrived at Devonport from China on Oct. 17, to pay off.

Nelson, Comdre. Erskine, has given great offence to the French, by summarily cancelling a contract entered into by the captain of a French man-of-war with some native chiefs of the New Hebrides for the purchase of land in their islands. Comdre. Erskine appears to have acted in this matter in strict conformity with the agreement entered into by Lord Granville with the French Government.

Opal, Capt. Brooke, was at Ascension up to Oct. 1, en route to Fernando Po. The Flirt would be ordered to Fernando Po on the arrival of the Bullfrog (which was en route) at St. Paul de Loanda. The Bullfrog will rejoin the Opal at Fernando Po, if not required on the Southern Division. The Algerine was en route to Cape Coast Castle, to order the Stork and Alecto to Fernando Po. The Stork will eventually proceed to Simon's Bay. The Alecto was in the Bights Division, and on the arrival of the Algerine will be sent to Fernando Po. The Starling was en route to Akassa Creek.

Osborne, Com. H. Rose, left Flushing on Oct. 16, with T.R.H. the Prince and Princess of Wales on board, on their return from the Continent, and landed their Royal Highnesses at Queenborough pier on Wednesday, after a boisterous passage.

Sparrowhawk, Lieut. and Com. W. Shearburn White, experienced a severe hurricane at Nassau, N.P., on Sept. 8, which caused great damage to the shipping and on the island. Of the shipping present, the Sparrowhawk, and the lighthouse tender, Richmond, alone rode the gale out in safety. The Bishop's yacht, Message of Peace, was driven on shore, but uninjured. The storm appears to have swept the Bahamas, and many lives have been lost to the southward, especially at Dominica.

Superb, Capt. Thomas Le H. Ward, C.B., having been three years in commission, will be paid off at Malta and recommissioned in December. A new crew is to be told off for her from Portsmouth and Devonport.

Swiftsure, Capt. Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, with the Sappho in company, arrived at San Francisco on Oct. 13, and would leave on the 18th inst. for Acapulco and Ranama. The Constance, at Callao on September 14, after arrival of mail due on the 19th inst., would visit various consular ports on the coast, unless otherwise directed. Letters from Esquimault state that her Majesty's ships Heroine and Sappho had arrived there. The latter had got out her two 64-pounder guns, which were of the same description as that which exploded on board the Daring in China, and had replaced them by two others of a newer and different pattern, that were in store in the Esquimault Dockyard. The steamship Queen of the Pacific arrived, bringing a large number of distinguished visitors, who having attended the ceremony of "driving the golden spike" on the completion of the Northern Pacific Railway, came on to visit British Columbia. The company included Lord Carrington, Sir James Hannen, Sir Charles Bowen, Sir Arthur Hobhouse, the Hon. A. Johnstone, and the Hon. Sackville West. Several of the visitors paid a visit to the Admiral on board the flagship.

Valorous, Capt. Stewart, arrived in the Sound from Bantry Bay on Saturday, and after embarking a large number of men for the Channel Squadron left for Portland.

The four training brigs Seaflower, Martin, Pilot, and Sealark, were returning to Plymouth on Monday afternoon from a cruise in the Channel, when a southerly gale sprang up. The brigs shortened sail, but missed picking up their mooring buoys. The Seaflower fouled the Pilot, and all four were nearly driven on the rocks under the Hoe. Minute guns were fired, and the Commander-in-Chief, Admiral Sir William Houston Stewart, directed the Admiral Superintendent to send tugs to their assistance, himself going out in the Great Western Company's tug, the Sir Walter Raleigh, when he succeeded in safely mooring all the brigs. Considerable damage was done to the starboard quarter of the Pilot by the Seaflower, the latter losing much of her gear, which had to be cut away.

Her Majesty, by Order in Council of August 23, 1883, having sanctioned a change in the relative rank of Warrant Officers of the Army and Navy, whereby Conductors of Supplies, Conductors of Stores, and Master-Gunners 1st-Class, shall take relative rank and precedence with, but after, Warrant Officers of the Royal Navy, the Admiralty have cancelled line 15 in the Table of Relative Rank, page 44, Article 189, of the Queen's Regulations, 1879; and while making Naval Warrant Officers the senior of the military ranks named, have at the same time made Midshipmen and Clerks junior to that rank, thus taking from the latter Naval officers their former relative rank in the Army, namely, that of Second Lieutenant.

The rebuilding of Sheerness Dockyard Church, from plans supplied by Mr. E. C. Bernays, C.E., of Chatham Dockyard, has been commenced by order of the Admiralty.

The usual white boards, with numbers conspicuously painted in black, which have been freely displayed during the last few weeks in Portsmouth Dockyard, to say nothing of the universal "spick-and-spanness" of everything visible, gave timely notice of the approaching annual visit of the Lords of the Admiralty. The ship basin still remains empty and muddy, while a new seating for the harbour caisson is being constructed; the sheers facing the harbour have also been removed, pending the reconstruction of the jetty. The Calliope has a mould for a platform of formidable dimensions fitted on the future site of the port sponson, which encroaches considerably on the deck-space. The Imperieuse presents quite a finished appearance, her upper works being painted, and her wood-sheathing caulked; but this is somewhat delusive, as a good deal remains to be done before she can be floated out of dock. The positions of the various cabins, &c., have been lined out on the after-part of the main deck, and the accommodation, judging by these, will be very indifferent; the admiral and captain, in particular, are very poorly provided for. The Colossus is once more under the sheers in the large basin, and has two of her 43-ton guns mounted in the foremost turret. The second one was shipped in the presence of their Lordships, on Wednesday, the operation occupying something under a quarter of an hour. The guns were slung with both purchases of the sheers, to facilitate the otherwise difficult process of pointing the muzzle first through the port, before the breech can be lowered, the length of the gun considerably exceeding the internal diameter of the turret. The economy of space consequent upon the substitution of steel bands for trunnions is very apparent, the pair of guns being only about a foot apart near the breech, while there is abundance of space on either side, a great contrast to the Dreadnought and others. The Edinburgh is having the armour-plates fixed on her after turret. The Mercury is in dock, with her propellers unshipped, and the Polyphemus in the stream. During their visit, the Lords of the Admiralty inspected the Imperieuse, barbette ship, which will be floated in January; the Camperdown, barbette ship, building; the Calliope, screw corvette, building; the Hecla, torpedo vessel, in dock; the Edinburgh, turret ship; the Polyphemus, torpedo ram; and the Colossus.

FRENCH MERCY.

Guerre à la Française is not quite in consonance with the views entertained by civilised nations as to the manner in which hostilities between belligerents should be carried on. At least this appears to be the case, if we take the narrative of the capture of Hue, written by a French officer for the Figaro, to be true. Mons. Pierre Loté is also a popular contributor to the Revue des Deux Mondes, so we are forced to accept his statements with deference, and especially so when they relate to the doings of his own branch of the service, the French Navy. According to this officer, the indiscriminate massacre of the natives of Hue by the French seamen, armed with Kropatchek magazine rifles, must have been sickening to behold. Men, women, and children, fleeing from their burning village, had to pass within a few yards of a fort held by the French bluejackets, who, seeing their chance of a good battue near at hand, filled their magazines and carefully adjusted their sights, and then calmly waited for the inhabitants to be driven out by the beaters, a flanking party sent round for the purpose. Speaking of these miserable human beings being driven to the slaughter, M. Loté says:—"We saw them halting at the end of the village, with singed hair and garments; then, after a moment's hesitation, tucking up their flowing robes as high as they could, and trying to protect their heads with planks against the impending shower of bullets, they rushed on, hoping to pass us. The great butchery then commenced. Two volleys (feux de salve) were fired, and it was quite a treat (c'était un plaisir) to see these fan-like streams of bullets, so easily manageable, sweeping down upon the fugitives, twice a minute, at the word of command, in a sure and methodical manner. It was like the jet from a huge watering-pot, which mowed them down by dozens, in a cloud of dust and gravel. We could see some of them who seemed to be driven quite mad, and who, picking themselves up, ran about limping, now one way, and now another, like wounded animals. Gathering up their robes in a comical manner, their long hair, having got unfastened, streamed down, and made them look like women. Others tried to escape by swimming the lagoon, to try and reach the junks; these were killed in the water. Some were very good divers, and remained a long time under water; but our men continued to kill them all the same, when they came up to breathe, like seals. The men then amused themselves by counting the dead,—50 on the left, 80 to the right. In the village there were small heaps of them. Some of them were regularly singed, and were still stirring; every now and again an arm or a leg was seen to stretch out in a last convulsion, and at intervals a dreadful scream was heard. With those killed in the southern forts, about 800 or 1,000 must have been disposed of. The sailors made bets as to the number destroyed. An Annamite fort from the mainland sent three shells at our men. They were well aimed, but no one was hit, and our men were so intent in watching the runaways and the swimmers, that they took no notice of these shells. Yet there were very few runaways or swimmers left. It was barely 9 in the morning, and all was over. The rout of the King of Annam was complete. The heat grew intense. The sailors, maddened by the sun and noise, then rushed out of the fort, and, quivering with excitement, rushed after the wounded, some of whom were crouching in holes, others feigning death, others at their last gasp, stretching out their hands, and pleading for mercy, shouting, 'Han, han!' in a heartrending voice, and slaughtered them with their bayonets, or brained them with the butt ends of their muskets." What a pity Monsieur Thiers was so tender-hearted when the Versailles soldiery entered Paris, but were stopped shooting down the Communards!

The Amphion, a new steel cruiser, was launched at Pembroke Dockyard on Saturday last. The vessel is 300 feet long and 46 feet in breadth, and her present tonnage (total weight) is 1,700 tons, which will be increased to 3,054 tons when fully equipped for sea. Her armament, which will be mounted on the Vavasseur principle, will consist of six 6-inch rifled breechloading guns on the broadside, and four similar guns revolving. The indicated horse-power of the engines is set down at 5,000, and it is expected that a speed of 16 knots will be attained. The Amphion will carry a crew of 250 men, and machine-guns.

The Chief of the German Admiralty, who is very active in his endeavours to strengthen and increase Germany's naval forces, has, after long deliberation, consented to have them placed in the contingency of war under the supreme control and direction of the General Staff, which will thus be enabled to conduct its operations without interference of intermediate departments. General Caprivi, the Chief of the Admiralty, has, in a certain sense, been compensated for this loss of power by having the coast defences entrusted to his exclusive charge. These changes have found expression in the new plan for mobilisation recently elaborated and submitted by the Admiralty to the Emperor for his final approval. In the plan of mobilising the navy, particular care is said to have been taken for providing against the eventuality of an attack from Russia, which is supposed to be nearer at hand than is generally believed. In accordance with the alterations proposed by the Admiralty, the Baltic Fleet is to be considerably enlarged and annually strengthened in the summer months by the North Sea Squadron, which, for the joint evolutions, is to meet with the vessels stationed in the Baltic. General Caprivi has in several important instances abandoned the policy pursued by his predecessor, and is especially anxious to protect the German coast, whose fortifications are not only continually strengthened, but brought into such close connection that they may be said to form an unbroken chain, extending from Pillau to Wilhelmshafen. The display of the Imperial flag in distant waters is no longer regarded as absolutely necessary for upholding the reputation of the Fatherland, and the opposition to the acquisition of more or less valueless colonies is backed by such an acknowledged authority as the Chief of the Admiralty.—Globe.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—A letter from Capt. Cleveland, R.N., which appeared in your last number, professes "to answer Lord Henry Lennox from a Naval point of view;" but after reading that letter carefully, I cannot see that he answers him at all, or that his off-hand assertions can be looked upon as logical replies, or can be considered in any way to refute the contention of Lord H. Lennox, viz., that in view of the enormous extent of our ocean trade, and its vital importance to the country, we have allowed the French (by reason of our own supineness) to approach us dangerously near, if not to equal us, in the strength of their Navy. Capt. Cleveland tells us that Naval history teaches that "superiority on the ocean does not rest solely upon the number, but upon the excellence of individual types of ships and men." Now, this statement would seem to imply that the individual types of our ships and men were better than those of the French, and that this "excellence" would make up for any want of superiority in numbers; but I scarcely think that even our own Naval architects will claim a decided superiority for the type of our ships, and in guns we are decidedly inferior. Indeed, it is only in our newest type that the French barbette system has been "frankly" adopted, and this copying the French surely proves that the Admiralty admit that, in certain particulars, the French ships are better designed than our own. As to the individual type of our men, I do not care to argue the point as to whether one Englishman is equal to two Frenchmen, or whether the old couplet,—

"Two —— Frenchmen, one Portugee,
One jolly Englishman lick all three,"

is an axiom to which we ought to trust, in view of the large introduction of mechanical contrivances into our present fighting ships, and those of our possible enemies; and whilst we are singing "Hearts of Oak" and "Rule, Britannia," on the fo'castles of our ships, it might be just as well to remember that in all probability Frenchmen are singing some equally patriotic airs on the fo'castles of their ships. If Capt. Cleveland will turn in his study of Naval history to Thiers' "Consulate and Empire," and read therein that historian's account of Trafalgar, and of "the Glorious First of June," he will not observe that the French attribute our success to any superiority either in the physical or moral qualities of our men; but what they do acknowledge is our superiority in seamanship, and the question then arises,—How did we acquire this superiority in seamanship? The answer is very simple, but seems, nevertheless, to be generally overlooked, and therefore I wish to lay particular stress upon it. It was in consequence of our great numerical superiority at sea that we kept the French to a great extent blockaded in their ports, thereby preventing them from gaining practical experience in seamanship; whereas our men, from being constantly at sea, blockading those ports, became the finest seamen which, in all probability, the world has ever seen, and were thus enabled to beat the French on unequal terms. It is, however, but little use for practical men to dwell upon our past glories, save as an interesting study; and to endeavour to build our hopes for the future upon them, or to think that they will terrify our possible enemies, appears to be most unwise, for even if we still possess this superiority in seamanship (which is open to doubt), it is more than doubtful whether it would give us so great an advantage with the present complicated machines in which we should have to fight. Everything points to the conclusion that the numerous recent inventions in mechanics, electricity, &c., will tend more and more to bring seamanship and personal prowess to a dead-level, and to reduce it all to a question of thickness of armour, weight of guns, and skill in working torpedoes, added to which will be the personal skill and nerve of the one individual who directs the movements of each ship. Guns, armour, torpedoes, and rams, we know that the French are not neglecting, and any-one who last winter saw the constant practice at steam tactics of the French squadron of evolution off the south coast of France, will have but little doubt of their assiduity to learn practical manœuvring. In what, then, I ask, does our superiority consist? And on what grounds do we claim the Naval supremacy of the world? Surely we are living in a fools' paradise, with our enormous wealth upon the ocean, our numerous colonies, and, "indeed almost our existence" (as Capt. Cleveland says), depending upon the freedom of our ocean highways. Here is France alongside of us, with few and insignificant colonies, and a comparatively trifling ocean trade, but an ironclad Navy equal, or almost equal, to ours, which she has been steadily and systematically building for the last ten years, and a fleet of armed transports surpassing those of all maritime nations combined. What can she want this naval force for? Is it really only to protect her trade, or is it for the purpose of aggression, and to dispute with us our vaunted Naval supremacy? Never before has France so nearly approached us in Naval strength, and never before have we been in a position when the loss of our Naval supremacy would have caused us such utter ruin as it would do now. If France does not, shortly after her systematic building programme is completed, find some cause of quarrel with England, and endeavour, with a very reasonable prospect of success, to try to wrest from us our supposed Naval supremacy, then surely human nature must have become changed, and no man shall any more covet his neighbour's house, or his trade, or anything that is his; then, indeed, the lion and the lamb may lie down together, and the days of universal peace will have dawned upon us; then we shall be justified in turning our building sheds and gun-factories into meeting-rooms for the peace societies, and in them arbitration committees composed of disinterested foreigners may be invited to meet for the purpose of arranging the affairs of England, of checking her aggression, and of assigning the limits to her empire. Then, indeed, the money which the French have expended upon their battle-ships will have been wasted, and our money will have been saved; but before we jump at this conclusion, it would be well for all thinking Englishmen who value their national prosperity (nay, existence), to consider if it is a rational one, and one which the teaching of history justifies us in coming to. If not, then every British merchant who has a shilling's-worth of property on the ocean should for his own sake, if not for that of his country, raise his voice, do all in his power to reverse the infatuated and short-sighted policy of the leaders of both political parties, in calmly, and without an adequate effort, allowing our Naval supremacy to slide from our grasp. I regret that the rules of the service forbid me to sign my own name to this letter, but thinking as I do upon the subject, I consider it no reproach to sign myself,

A Naval Alarmist.

H.M.S. EXCELLENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—With reference to the system obtaining on board H.M.S. Excellent, I quite agree that it is bad as regards the short-course lieutenants. I see in one of your contemporaries an accusation against the staff of overbearing hectoring in the performance of their duties. My experience last year was very different, and a glance down the list of lieutenants on the staff at present would prove that such is not the case now, to anybody who happens to know those officers. One of your correspondents talks about a lieutenant being placed on half-pay for complaining to the authorities. I remember the case well, and thought that officer very hardly used. But as to the faults in the system. The short-course lieutenants are obliged to take duty in turns, unless senior to the second staff officer. Now, the short-course men are never allowed to take upon themselves the duties of commanding officer. The duties are so arranged that the short-course man is always junior to the long-course man on duty at the same time, and he has therefore to play second-fiddle, though another staff officer may be doing duty as commanding officer next day who is five years junior to the short-course man of the previous day. One soon finds out how very differently the men view the short-course lieutenants from the staff. Not once nor twice, but twenty times have I been in a boat in uniform, and found myself humbly laying on my oars, and the coxswain baring his head to a man nearly five years my junior. I shall never forget the explosion of wrath from a venerable three-striped officer of one of the non-combatant branches with whom I was in the boat when this occurred. The Excellent is a big institution, and it is certainly advisable that the routine duties should be carried out by her own officers, and if the presence of a short-course lieutenant were necessary, this arrangement would be unavoidable, and no one could complain. But the writer most emphatically states his belief that there is no necessity whatever for the short-course officers taking any duty apart from the instruction for the purposes of which they are appointed. When, as is often the case, no short-course men are available, things work just as well, and the duties themselves are not such as to cause or excite any overwhelming zeal, nor is any intelligence required in their performance. To a man who has been doing duty, perhaps, as first lieutenant of a small craft, and has, it may be, eight or nine years' seniority, it is somewhat crushing to be reduced to doing nothing of greater importance than the midshipman's work of going the rounds at night. As regards the drill, it was invariably carried out with a great deal of tact, patience, and good temper, whether the instructor were a lieutenant or a petty officer; but I remember one thing, or rather several things, that made me very indignant, and which I certainly ought to have represented. At general quarters, or what answered to general quarters, the short-course lieutenants were stationed No. 1. On more than one occasion, as soon as the drill commenced, the order was given to change rounds, which made us all No. 13, whose duties consist entirely of horse work. Then I remember, on one of these occasions, being ordered to lie down, and when the word was given to certain numbers to fall out, those numbers had to roll to the rear on their stomachs and backs; whilst No. 1 filled the numbers up according to the rules of a game which has always appeared to me a long way ahead of whist in the matter of difficulty. I assure you, Sir, that I have been kept rolling backwards and forwards, over a not scrupulously clean deck, for 20 minutes at the bidding of an A.B. To make things worse, he did not seem to understand the intricate rules above mentioned, and kept us rolling backwards and forwards three times as much as he ought to have done, in vain attempts to "correct mistakes." After this game was over, we had aiming drill, a more excellent song than the other. This consisted in training a gun (by tackles) so that the No. 1 for the time being might practice aiming at different objects, which were frequently changed and frequently moving. Except for No. 1, this is pure horse work, no drill whatever about it, and yet we lieutenants were kept there. You may say,—Why did we not complain? But the half-pay incident above alluded to had just occurred, and we short-course fellows had at that time been terribly crushed. I have only mentioned short course for convenience,—the long course is the same.—I am, &c.,

Short Course.

Sir,—Very many thanks for the most excellent article in your edition of Oct. 6 on the "short course," an article which should be the deathblow to a system which has disgusted many a good officer, and done more to lessen the efficiency of us lieutenants as a body than anything the Admiralty have ever invented. I have a holy dread of anything connected with the Excellent, for I have tried the course and gradually felt my self-respect oozing out. It reminds me of that excellent book "Vice Versa," for after 10 or 12 years of lieutenant and four years of sub's time, one suddenly finds oneself once more a midshipman. The only thing that can be said for the powers that be, is that they do not cane short-service officers.—I am, &c.,

Backbone.

Sir,—I write as a lieutenant, and thank you for the steps you have taken to ventilate the grievances of officers going through a short course in H.M.S. Excellent. It is useless for any individual officer to attempt to make the Admiralty move in the matter. The only occasion on which such an attempt was made, the Admiralty, as a board, did that of which they would have individually been ashamed. They shirked the question; neither supported their own regulations, nor altered them so as to make the existing unjustifiable orders of the Excellent legitimate; and as to the officer who had the courage to give vent to his opinions, quoting their own "Admiralty Instructions" chapter and verse in justification of what he did, he was placed on half-pay, that being the most effectual way of shutting his mouth. This may be justice, but it is justice of a sort that should be labelled "Admiralty." Nothing but a direct order would ever tempt me to go through the Excellent, and it is not to be wondered at that, with such an example before them, few lieutenants care to place themselves voluntarily in a position where they can get neither justice nor redress.—I am, &c., Water Rat.

THE CLIMATE OF BARBADOS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In the issue of your paper for Aug. 11 last, p. 641, there was published a paragraph in which it was alleged that the late Lieut.-Col. Bullen, R.E., had died here from yellow fever, and Lieut.-Col. Farrell, R.E., had also fallen a victim to this climate. I have now the honour, by direction of the General Board of Health for this colony, to forward you herewith copy of a resolution passed by that Board denying the truth of those statements, and a copy of a letter from Surg.-Major Robinson, senior medical officer here, informing the Board from the military records of what diseases Lieut.-Cols. Bullen and Farrell had died; and I am instructed to ask that you will publish the resolution and letter in the next issue of your paper after the receipt hereof. I am also instructed to say that the Board regret that before you allowed a statement of that nature to be published in your paper you did not first ascertain its correctness.—I am, &c., James Sanderson, Clerk-General Board of Health.

Barbados, September 29.

[Copy.]

(Resolution passed by the General Board of Health, Barbados, Sept. 26, 1883, in refutation of a statement published in the Army and Navy Gazette of Aug. 11, 1883, alleging that Lieut.-Col. Bullen, R.E., had died at Barbados from yellow fever, and Lieut.-Col. Sidney Farrell, R.E., from the effects of the climate.)

The attention of the General Board of Health for Barbados having been called to a paragraph in the Army and Navy Gazette of Aug. 11, 1883, wherein it is stated that Lieut.-Col. Richard Bullen, lately commanding the Royal Engineers at Barbados, had died here from yellow fever; that his predecessor Col. Fraser had also died here from a similar cause, and that Lieut.-Col. Sidney Farrell, whom Col. Fraser succeeded, also fell a victim to the climate. And whereas the paragraph referred to is so worded as to convey a false impression as to the healthiness of the island as a station for troops, and further, as the statements therein made are untrue, as the annexed letter from Surg.-Major Robinson, A.M.D., the Senior Medical Officer at Barbados, shows, Col. Bullen having died of dysentery contracted, not in this island, but in Trinidad, while on official duty there, and Col. Farrell of continued fever to which he would have been equally liable in any part of the world, while Col. Fraser alone died of yellow fever in the epidemic of 1881. And whereas statements published in the Army and Navy Gazette are considered reliable, that paper being generally looked on as semi-official. Resolved, therefore, that his Excellency the Governor be asked to transmit a copy of this resolution and of Dr. Robinson's letter through the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the War Office, and that the Clerk be instructed to forward similar copies to the editor of the Army and Navy Gazette with a request that he would publish the same in the next issue of his paper after the receipt thereof in contradiction of the paragraph referred to, and also to express to the editor the regret of the Board that before he published so serious a statement he did not first ascertain its correctness.

Army Medical Office, Barbados, Sept. 6, 1883.

W. H. Jones, Esq., Acting President Board of Health, Barbados.—Sir,—In answer to your communication of yesterday's date, I beg to inform you that Lieut.-Col. Bullen, R.E., died on June 30 last, from dysentery, which he apparently contracted at Trinidad, by imprudently sleeping in a draught with insufficient covering while heated from dancing, and on his return to Barbados, on May 29, 1883, he was suffering from "diarrhœa and general disorder of digestive functions." Dr. Boult, surgeon-major, A.M.D., attended him here during his illness, and as the disease advanced Dr. Archer, civil practitioner, afforded continuous medical advice, and at a later stage of the disease he was also visited by Dr. Piggott, civil practitioner. 2. Brevet Col. Farrell, R.E., had been, a few days before his death, much exposed to the sun, from the nature of his duties; but he got chilled and remained in his clothes wet with perspiration for some while—the next day he was placed on the sick list for "simple continued fever," when subsequently effusion on the brain supervened; he died from this latter disease Sept. 7, 1879, as disclosed by the post-mortem examination specially made in this instance, and at which Dr. Bowen, civil practioner, was present, he having been in consultation with the medical officer who attended the deceased. 3. Col. Frazer, R.E., died of yellow-fever at Barbadoes on Aug. 5, 1881, when the sickness appears to have been generally prevalent. The foregoing cases were all, as they occurred, fully reported accordingly to the proper channel in the United Kingdom.—I am, Sir, yours very respectfully, Wm. C. Robinson, Surgeon-Major A.M.D., S.M.O.

Obituary.

Capt. William H. Bridge. R.N., died at St. Leonards-on-Sea on Oct. 11. Born in 1810, this officer entered the Navy in 1822, and retired in 1864. He served during the first Burmese war and capture of Cheduba, 1824-26 (medal and Ava clasp). Was gunnery-lieutenant of H.M.S. Southampton, and covered the landing of the troops at the recapture of Natal and rescue of the beleaguered garrison in 1846 (medal). Senior and gunnery-lieutenant of H.M.S. Vengeance during the bombardment of Odessa and landing of the Crimean expedition; subsequently senior lieutenant on shore of the naval brigade during the siege of Sebastopol and the attack on that fortress upon Oct 17, 1854. For this service he was promoted, receiving also the Crimean and Turkish medals with Sebastopol clasps and the 5th class Medjidie. Capt. Bridge was one amongst the first batch to pass through the Naval College on its establishment, obtaining fourth place in order of merit, and, in consequence, his lieutenant's commission. He later on, as an officer in the Experimental squadron, received the thanks in writing of the Admiralty for blowing up by his own method a sunken vessel which had during a long time obstructed the passage into Cork harbour. He was in receipt of a naval pension.

The Caroline, a new unarmoured sloop, built at Sheerness, has broken down in her trials at the measured mile, owing to defects in her machinery.

By the recent death of Capt. W. H. Bridge (retired), a commander's naval pension of £65 a year is placed at the disposal of the Admiralty.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS.—The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. Eno's Fruit Salt is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use Eno's Fruit Salt, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "Eno's Fruit Salt." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at Eno's Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. Eno's Patent.

London Amusements.

Recognising the demand of a large proportion of play-goers for strong situations and exciting sensational effects, Mr. Augustus Harris has converted Drury Lane Theatre into a kind of Metropolitan Porte St. Martin, where melodramas are to be produced on a scale of magnitude proportionate to the size of the enormous establishment of which he has boldly become the lessee. The new drama, in five acts and seventeen tableaux, framed by Mr. Augustus Harris and Mr. Robert Buchanan, entitled "A Sailor and His Lass," is a remarkable proof of the extent to which scenic development has been carried in later days. Since Monday night, when the piece was produced with every sign of success, the superfluities of the story have been judiciously removed, and the unwearied spectators have now only to feast their eyes on a series of theatrical illusions, and to watch with 'bated breath the conflict between the several representatives of vice and virtue. An unjust accusation of murder is the mainspring of the plot, and the mode by which the innocent man is ultimately declared guiltless of the cruel charge brought against him keeps the attention of the audience fairly fixed till the curtain falls on his reprieve from the scaffold. Free use has been made of such recent events as the dynamite explosion, the escape of a stowaway, and the heroic rescue of a shipwrecked crew by the wife of a light-house keeper. These incidents, pictorially treated with considerable skill, produce a sufficient amount of excitement and enthusiasm among the spectators, and a real shower of rain, capitally managed, gives more vividness to a stage thunderstorm than has been hitherto imparted. Mr. Augustus Harris, who impersonates the nautical hero, acts with an amount of energy and pathos sufficient to enlist the full sympathies of the entire audience, and bravely discharges responsibilities of a most onerous kind. Miss Harriet Jay and Miss Sophie Eyre represent with considerable earnestness and deep feeling the two sisters, ruthlessly persecuted by a libertine, adroitly portrayed by Mr. Henry George. An opportunity is afforded Mr. Fernandez of displaying his forcible style as an old farmer tempted into crime; and the clever acting of Miss Clara Jecks as a street vagrant, and the humorous embodiments of Mr. Harry Nicholls as a frothy demagogue, and of Mr. Harry Jackson as a good-tempered cabman, afford the needful amount of comic relief to the serious interest. No more striking scenic effects than those of the dynamite explosion and the sinking of the scuttled ship have been yet witnessed on the stage, and on these pictorial triumphs the pecuniary success of the latest Drury Lane novelty may safely depend.

At the Haymarket, the drama of "Fédora" has now passed its one-hundredth performance, and its attractiveness seems still unimpaired.

The Aquarium, at Westminster, is now furnished by Mr. Farini with two performing bulls of the Durham breed, tutored to execute the feats of horses trained for the equestrian arena. Two female gymnasts, called Olga and Kaira, also go through some daring performances on the high trapeze, ending with a dive from the lofty dome into the net below.

The Vokes family will appear at Her Majesty's Theatre at Christmas, where a new children's pantomime will be produced under the title of "Little Red Riding Hood."

The management of St. George's Hall will produce on Monday next an entirely new musical sketch, by Mr. Corney Grain, entitled, "On the Thames;" and a new after-piece, by Arnold Felix, music by George Gear, entitled, "A Water Cure." "Treasure Trove" will still retain its place in the programme.

The Irish Times says:—"It is currently reported that Major-Gen. T. C. Lyons, C.B., well known in this command, on the staff of which he served for several years as Deputy-Qrmr.-Gen., will return to active employment next year, when he will be provided with a major-general's command.'

On Saturday, the 13th inst., between 40 and 50 members of the United Service Warrant Officers' Club met at their rooms in New Coventry Street, Leicester Square, for the purpose of taking luncheon together and drawing up the rules for the guidance of the club, as well as to appoint officers and committee of management. Those who had not visited the establishment before were much satisfied with the splendid accommodation, which consists of dining-room, billiard-room, card-room, bed-rooms, offices, &c., all beautifully furnished. Members passing through London will find this a great convenience, especially as it is in such a central position. Upwards of 200 warrant officers have already joined the club, and, when better known, doubtless a very large number, both at home and abroad, will become members.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—With the darkening days and changing temperatures, the digestion becomes impaired, the liver disordered, and the mind despondent, unless the cause of the irregularity be expelled from the blood and body by an alterative like these Pills. They go directly to the source of the evil, thrust out all impurities from the circulation, reduce distempered organs to their natural state, and correct all defective and contaminated secretions. Such easy means of instituting health, strength, and cheerfulness should be in the possession of all whose stomachs are weak, whose minds are much harassed, or whose brains are overworked. Holloway's is essentially a blood-tempering medicine, whereby its influence, reaching the remotest fibres of the frame, effects a universal good.

As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." FROM Returns made up to October 1, it would appear that 7,000 more men have enlisted this year than were enrolled in the same time in 1882, when the Egyptian War was exciting the country, but not, it would appear, arousing the martial ardour of the population. Within the last two months, the enlistments have exceeded the waste of the service by 2,000 men. The Regular battalions are now raised in their Territorial Districts to the extent, on an average, of five-sixths of their strength. In round numbers, eighty-five per cent. of the recruits now enlist in the districts to which the regiments they enter belong, the remaining fifteen per cent. being recruited in the large towns. These returns are very satisfactory as abstract factors in the calculations which must be made by those who are working out the results of the new system, but we have once more to ask our War-Office authorities to abandon the attempt to persuade the country that all the recruits now joining are fit for service abroad, or likely to turn out good soldiers in the time they have to serve at home with the colours. The most interesting and important statement is that which relates to the enlistments in excess of waste, but even here we have no data to enable us to decide whether the waste spoken of is absolute or relative. If there was a waste, say of 1,800 men in a certain period, on a reduced establishment of the Army, where the reduction was caused by deficient recruits, and the Artillery, Guards, &c., were 5,000 below their strength, the addition of 2,000 men to the ranks would be in excess of the waste, but would still leave the establishment below its proper standard. As to the five men out of every six who come to enlist at the head-quarters of the Territorial regiment in the district where they present themselves, we can only say that to our own knowledge men belonging to different parts of the Three Kingdoms have been enlisted in some Territorial regiments very much in excess of the 15 per cent. who are assumed not to belong to the Territorial Districts at all. The words "on an average" may explain a good deal. Great efforts are made to work the Territorial system. In some instances, it has been successful. But there is a curious fact which ought not to be lost sight of among the reformers, as it was exemplified in the War of 1870-1871 between France and Germany, and that is the effect of Territorialism in concentrating the sorrow caused by losses in action. In some of the great battles of 1870, there were, as always occurs, corps by which the brunt of the fighting was borne; and in these corps, again, there were regiments which suffered very great losses, the 58th Prussian Infantry, for example, at Wörth, while others were almost untouched. The consequence was that in the districts to which the regiments that suffered most belonged, there was an amount of misery and grief caused by the news at which Fatherland generally rejoiced which no glory or triumph could alleviate or soothe. Every family had to deplore the death of a member—the breadwinner, or the hope—or to endure the anguish and anxiety of hearing that some dear one was wounded. We may imagine what the effect would be on some small county here, if 500 of the youth of a district were reported killed and wounded out of the local regiment.

THE War Office has adopted Colonel Prior's "War Game on Models," and the rules and instructions will shortly be in the hands of officers commanding regiments. Colonel Prior has certainly advanced military education another step, and to him belongs the credit of having placed instruction in tactics within the reach of all classes of officers. In this respect, the War Game on Models has a great advantage over Kriegs-spiel, which is suitable only to officers of the senior ranks. Colonel Prior's invention has another merit, for being more real, a greater interest is given to the game. The march of events in modern times is rapid, and the art of war has not been allowed to lag behind. Indeed, war has now become a science to be studied with care and diligence by all those who take up arms as a profession. In the game of whist, the most skilful player is likely, in the long run, to be the surest winner; in warfare, however, the element of chance always plays an important part, and the most able General cannot help making occasional mistakes. It therefore becomes necessary so to train our young officers as to make the chances of blundering as few as possible. Perhaps, of all sciences, the science of war is the most uncertain, for the finest disposition of troops is at all times liable to be upset by some unforeseen circumstance, which turns an expected victory into a complete defeat. This element of uncertainty must always be present in military operations, for the General has not only to draw up his plans according to well-established military principles, but he has also to take into consideration the temper and condition of his men. The successful General must combine many qualities. He must not only be well up in theoretical principles, but he must, above all things, be a thoroughly practical man. Our recent Military history has shown us that theory alone, unsupported by the practical, may result in frequent disaster. The need for practical Military instruction is therefore greater than ever, though it is an acknowledged fact that Generals, like poets, are born, and not made. America before the War of Secession could not boast of many eminent commanders, but the opportunity being given, men were found equal to the occasion, and many left their desks and casting aside the pen for the sword, proved themselves the ablest of leaders. Their military ardour had not been damped by long years of dull routine, their only school was the battlefield, and surely this was the very best. The French Revolution also produced its military geniuses, and when the occasion arises, men will always be found ready for the emergency. But with us genius has but little chance of even showing itself, for, notwithstanding the abolition of Purchase and the introduction of "seniority, tempered by selection," the dull routine of promotion has to be gone through; the ladder has to be mounted, rung by rung, with but few exceptions, and thus many a genius is doomed to be all his military life a mere regimental drudge, while favoured mediocrity passes him, and opportunity never arising, his true worth is never known. War-games have of recent years fallen into disrepute in the English Army. There was always a certain amount of prejudice against them, on account of their origin; for they were rather thrust upon the British officer after the Franco-Prussian War. The successes of the Germans in that campaign went a good way towards Germanising our Army. In Military matters we are purely imitative, and it was found that the German officer in his hours of ease played kriegs-spiel. To this was attributed a great amount of the success which attended the German Army. Consequently, kriegs-spiel was taught and played at all our camps of instruction. The game, however, fell a little into disfavour, for it has not yet been forgotten that some of the most expert kriegs-spiel players in England have, in recent years, been found to be most unsuccessful leaders in the field. In the last fifty years the art of war has made great advances, and long-range artillery and breech-loading rifles have revolutionised modern tactics. When the Infantry arm becomes better known and more skilfully used, and consequently, its destructive power is made more effective, still greater changes will, no doubt, be brought about. It is thought that the direct attack can never be effectual in the face of modern firearms, and we can recall no instances either in the war of 1870-71, or in that between Russia and Turkey, in which it was successful. On the other hand, in the recent campaign in Egypt, the lines of Tel-el-Kebir were carried from the front. But without wishing to detract from that engagement, we doubt if the position would have been forced had it been held by trained and disciplined troops. What we have said in no way proves that war-games are not useful; in fact, we think them absolutely necessary, more especially for the younger officers of the Army, for it so happens that as it becomes more essential for them to have a proper training in tactics, the opportunities of imparting the instruction have become fewer on account of the weak state of our battalions. Take a field-day at Aldershot, or even one of those days set apart for minor tactics, and what does the company officer learn? It may be all very well for the brigadiers or for the officers commanding regiments, but the company officer has no idea of what is going on. The moves to him have no object, and it is not to be wondered at that he takes little or no interest in the day's work. What chance, then, has an officer of making himself even a good commander of a regiment, to say nothing of a brigade or a division? He certainly will never learn on the barrack square, which is now nothing more than a training-ground for recruits. Under these circumstances, the necessary instruction can be imparted only by means of war-games. We therefore think that Colonel Prior has supplied a real want, and has conferred a benefit upon the service. There are many small practical questions which, though they may never arise on a field-day, are constantly occurring on active service, and these can be demonstrated by the war-game. The War Office has done well to adopt Colonel Prior's scheme, but the difficulty has not ended here. It is an easy matter to lead a horse to the water, but you cannot make him drink, and the difficulty will be to get officers to take up the game. Officers commanding districts, brigades, and regiments should do all in their power to encourage officers to play the game, and to take interest in it, so that instruction may be given in the model-room which can never be imparted on parade. Colonel Prior's scheme is, on the whole, so good, that we do not feel disposed to look too closely for imperfections; but we should not be doing that officer justice if we did not point out what we consider a defect. He says, in his rules, that the senior officer present is to act as chief umpire. The post of chief umpire is, we think, all-important. The garrison instructor, or indeed any officer with only a small knowledge of the art of war, or of military history, might be able to draw up the scheme with its general and special idea; but to be a judge of appeal between the contending sides, and having in the end to give final judgment, would require, we think, more than ordinary ability; and if the decisions on the different points did not command the respect of those playing, all interest in the game would soon vanish. We therefore think that the post of chief umpire should not be left to chance, for the senior officer present might know as much about tactics as he did about mending shoes, and to call upon him to decide between the contending sides might bring the whole thing into ridicule and contempt. We would, therefore, suggest that the post of chief umpire should be permanent, and the officer selected should be one who, from his position, knowledge, and experience, would command the confidence and respect of the players.

THE state of the Navy has, during the past fortnight, attracted more than usual attention. The inspection of our principal Naval Arsenals by the Lords of the Admiralty, preceded as it was by the publication of a document purporting not only to be a refutation of the arguments adduced by those alarmists who would have the Admiralty build more ships, but also to contain such a statement of the present condition of our first line of defence as should effectually reassure the public mind, and disabuse it of the idea that England's Navy is weaker than that of France. This was followed by an outburst of incredulity on the part of Naval experts. Lord Henry Lennox entered the Lists, to prove the culpable negligence of the Admiralty in the matter of supplying breech-loading ordnance to our battle-ships. He was followed by Admiral Wake at Plymouth, who sided with the alarmists, proving that the English Fleet was no match for that of France in ships, speed, or guns. The Lords of the Admiralty then proceeded to Gosport, and witnessed at the Royal Marine Artillery barracks some experiments between a Krupp gun captured in Egypt, and one of the new breechloaders being supplied to the Navy. Need we add that the Krupp gun was found to be immeasurably superior to the English "modified French system." Lord Northbrook takes credit to the Admiralty for waiting until the breech-loading question was decided. But is it decided? The French Navy is now supplied with guns which we are only just commencing to copy, guns which Lord Northbrook admits "are greatly superior" to any in use in our Navy. We are, however, extremely gratified to hear that the Admiralty "are now beginning to move quickly," for it is quite time they were moving at a somewhat brisker pace than the old "Dockyard stroke." As Lord Northbrook justly remarks, Englishmen must be prepared for heavy Estimates until the Fleet is fully equipped, as the efficiency of the Navy depends entirely on its being placed in a proper state and condition to safeguard the manifold interests at all times committed to its charge, and this can only be done by the expenditure of money. But how is it that the Admiralty have not arrived at this wise conclusion before? It is not enough to have an efficient personnel, for though "Defence, not Defiance," is our motto, officers and men require ships under them, to render defence possible. All the qualities of the British sailor, so ably extolled by Lord Northbrook, are of no avail at sea without a modern ironclad and modern guns to handle. What we say now, as we have said so often in the past, is, that we have not enough ships, and that it is the duty of the Admiralty to provide the best, strongest, and fleetest ironclads, and the heaviest and most accurate and powerful guns modern science can produce, and these in such numbers as to render it a matter of certainty that no foreign Power is as strong as England upon the ocean. The perfectly complacent view taken by the Daily Press of the comparative strength of the French and English Fleets naturally lulls the public mind into a false feeling of security, from which the people of this country may, some fine morning, be most suddenly awakened by some signal Naval disaster. What are Sir Thomas Brassey's views on the subject?—"In our unarmoured classes, an attempt has been made to combine in each ship so many qualities, that the especial purpose for which they have been built has been lost to view. We wanted fast cruisers to protect our commerce. We built vessels heavily armed and of large displacement, and yet so ill provided with coal that they could hardly steam from one port to another at a moderate speed; while the cost was so great, that many repetitions of the design were considered impossible. In the third class of cruisers of the French Navy, of the Rigault-de-Genouilly type, of only 1,640 tons' displacement, but with an estimated speed of fifteen knots, it has been shown that good speed and great coal endurance may be obtained in ships of reasonable dimensions and at a moderate cost." It is thus shown that the Constructive Department of the Admiralty has been terribly mismanaged, and that the money of the taxpayers has in this country been squandered in building experimental ships, which, as a matter of course, have proved failures, as shown by Sir Thomas Brassey, while the ships constructed by the French have turned out well. Regarding the attacks which would be made upon our commerce in time of war, Sir Thomas in his work on the British Navy, from which we again quote, says:—"Our Naval requirements can only be determined with reference to the nature of the attack which may be directed against us. Our most recent expressions have shown that our ironclads might have been surrounded in Eastern waters by a cloud of these torpedo boats, of which upwards of 100 were constructed for the Russian Navy in seven months, while our commerce might have been harassed by the attacks of armed merchant steamers. The speed required in our own vessels must, of course, depend on the speed of the hostile ships, and the details brought together in the present section will have been sufficient to show that a large proportion of our possible antagonists have a decided advantage over our own ships in the essential quality of speed." In the face of these facts, we ask all common-sense Englishmen whether it is right to attempt to lull the country into a false sense of security, as has recently been done by Lord Northbrook. Numerically, the French Navy will soon be superior to that of England. What is worse is, that, on the authority of Sir Thomas Brassey, we have now proven that in speed and endurance the French cruisers are better than the English. In ordnance, even Lord Northbrook admits that the French ships are better armed than our own. As to Lord Northbrook's conviction that our Naval Constructors will maintain their high reputation for designing good ships, we can only remark that it used to be an old adage, that "The French build the best ships, and the English fight them," and we believe the first part of this saying holds good to this day. Surely, it is not required of us to prove any other defects in the English ships, to satisfy the country that we have not raised our voice in warning without just cause?

WE referred last week to the case of Colour-Serjeant Malins, of the 3rd Battalion, King's (Shropshire Light Infantry), and pointed out some of the inconveniences resulting from the new system of Army organisation of which the court-martial at Shrewsbury has furnished proof. From the numerous letters which have reached us this week, from Militia commanding officers in all parts of the kingdom, it is evident that the views we expressed are pretty universally held by all those who have had experience of the Territorial system in practice, and that sooner or later the War Office will be obliged seriously to consider the subject of a complete revision of the present organisation, which certainly is not producing the good which we were led to suppose would result from it. One well-known and most zealous Militia Lieutenant-Colonel — a Liberal and supporter of Mr. Childers' military policy—writes as follows:—"The Territorial system, as the principle exists at the present time, not only is a misnomer, but it is one of the cruellest of military shams. It does no good to anybody, but, on the contrary, does an immensity of harm, by putting all classes on a false footing, and rendering it more than ever difficult for a Militia commanding officer properly to discharge the duties he owes to the State. It has absolutely no merit, excepting that it has pleased the vanity of a few men, who would seem to prefer the rôle of peacocks to that of soldiers, and whose vanity is satisfied if they are only allowed to go to Court with a few yards of gold lace on their tunics; entirely unmindful of the great sacrifices which their service, in which they should take a soldierly pride, is being made to suffer at their expense." There is no doubt a great deal of reason in what our correspondent says. The Militia has undoubtedly suffered, and will, we fear, suffer more, from the Territorial system, unless those who are recognised as its champions bestir themselves, and compel the War Office so to modify the existing regulations as to enable it to maintain the position it has held for generations with credit to itself and advantage to the country. We have never denied that the principle of Territorialism is sound in theory. It must be of immense benefit to have a proper understanding existing between the several forces which go to make up our rather incongruous Army. Yet care should be taken lest in bringing about a union we overstep legitimate bounds, and render impracticable the very good which might otherwise be looked for. The framers of the Territorial system closed their eyes to facts of which they ought to have taken cognisance. Their idea was to Germanise; but they quite forgot that the foundation upon which the German model from which they were copying is constructed, is entirely different in all its main features from that with which they had to deal. The German Army is an Army in all senses of the word,—its First Line and Reserves are realities. Possessing, as they do, an immense power in conscription, the Germans have this great advantage over us,—they have the material always at hand; all they have to do is to establish and maintain a system which will enable them to work it into efficient units, and take care that no power is wasted. How different it is with us! We resent all idea of conscription in any form. Our Army reformers, however, either cannot or will not accept facts as they stand. They seem to be running after a Will-o'-the-Wisp, hoping that if they only follow their mad career long enough, matters will, eventually right themselves. And whilst they are engaged in a vain attempt to do impossibilities, the Army is crumbling to pieces under their hands. That this is the case, the failure of their latest "fad"—Territorialism—is convincing proof. As we say, the principle of Territorialism is defensible enough. It is in the carrying-out of the idea that the mistake has been made. Taking advantage of the known weaknesses of those for whom he was legislating, Mr. Childers conceived the happy idea of welding together the Line and Militia under a Territorial system, by giving to the junior service the titles and distinctions borne by the senior. In order to render the bait more attractive, he decided that all were in future to wear the same uniform, that the union was to be a reality. The great mistake was, as we have always contended, that the idea of union was carried too far. We cannot conceive how anybody can have been found so ignorant of human nature, and especially military human nature, as to suppose that the Territorial system, as now constituted, could operate for the benefit of the service generally. How could the present system work? It cannot even be expected to run smoothly in peace-time, but it would break down entirely in a period of war. If the 53rd and 85th Regiments and the Shropshire and Hereford Militia—the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th Battalions of the King's (Shropshire Light Infantry)—were to come together at Aldershot or elsewhere, they would all work as separate battalions, under their own Staffs. But at Shrewsbury they are supposed to work together in harmony, and surprise is expressed when it is discovered that they have failed to do so. The argument in favour of the existing system, of course, will be that it was established for the purpose of providing a united depôt, which would allow of Militia serjeants being available for drilling Line recruits, and vice versâ. It is difficult, however, to believe that any sane man could have expected that such a system ever could be carried on without friction, more especially having regard to the anomalous position occupied by the Militia Staff, the members of which are called upon to do Brigade duties, without any extra pay. As matters stand, the Militia Staff do not even receive during the non-training period half the pay of their Line comrades. And yet the War Office expects that they and the serjeants of the Line depôts will serve together in a perfectly contented frame of mind. The result of this shortsighted policy is that no good men are to be got to fill vacancies on the Militia Staffs, and Colonels are complaining bitterly of the difficulties against which they have to contend in their desire to keep their regiments reasonably efficient. It was wrong, of course, to give the Militia Staff nothing to do all the year round, and any measures introduced with the view of utilising their services must be regarded in the light of an improvement. But there is reason in all things, and the withdrawal of the authority of the Militia Adjutant during the non-training period, and the transfer of that authority to the Brigade Staff, is a serious error, which ought at once to be rectified. It speaks well for the discipline of the Militia that there have not been more cases reported of a similar nature to that which has occasioned so much stir at Copthorne Barracks. Had the Militia Staff throughout the country resented the injustice under which they have been suffering, it would have been no more than was to be expected. The good-feeling of these old soldiers has induced them to sit down quietly under the injustice, but the injustice has nevertheless been felt most keenly, and until it is removed, the Militia will never recover the position it has forfeited. Throughout the country the Press is taking up this question in no uncertain spirit, and showing by figures how seriously Militia recruiting is being affected by the mischievous

Military legislation of 1881. Attempts are made in official quarters to refute the statements of those who contend that Territorialism has failed in the purposes for which it was originated. These attempts will be of little avail, so long as Militia commanding officers hold the views they do now. The object with which the system of Territorial regiments was introduced was, we were told, to improve the Militia. But what if its only effect is to improve the force off the face of the earth altogether? A service like the Militia is one we cannot afford to play with. Officers and men have had their eyes opened to the fact that Territorialism has turned out to be a snare and a delusion. The feeling having been excited, the Secretary of State should lose no time in ascertaining the views of representative men—men like the Duke of Buccleuch, Lord Galloway, Lord Percy, &c.—on the subject, in order that he may be able to meet their wishes, and so overcome the difficulty, before it is too late.

Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh returned to England on Thursday, after a lengthy stay on the Continent, accompanied by her Imperial and Royal Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh and suite. Prior to leaving Germany, H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh had a lengthy interview with his Majesty the Emperor of Germany, at which the insult offered to the Duke of Edinburgh by his Royal uncle the Grand Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha was, it is said, fully discussed. The German Press seems unanimous on this occasion in siding with the Duke of Edinburgh, and gives the following version of the affair. It appears that on invitations being sent out by their Royal Highnesses of Edinburgh for a ball to celebrate the birthday anniversary of the Duchess, two ladies admitted to the Saxe-Coburg and Gotha Court were omitted from the Duchess of Edinburgh's list. The Grand Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha took offence at the omission, and failing to move the Duchess of Edinburgh to include his lady friends in her list of guests, telegraphed to the whole of the members of his Court, nobility and gentry of Saxe-Coburg, forbidding them to attend the ball to which they had been invited by their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. Were the Grand Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha of any importance in Europe, England, and not the German Emperor, would have to take the matter in hand; but as his Highness is really of so little account, even in his own country, we can well afford to pass over the attempted insult with the contempt it deserves.

Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell rejoined the Channel Squadron on Thursday night, at Portland. The Squadron unmoored and left last night for Portsmouth and Plymouth respectively. One week's leave will be given to each watch; the ships will be docked, and are ordered to reassemble at Portland on November 19.

The French Admiralty hope to be able to launch during the ensuing twelve months four ironclads and two fast cruisers, and no exertion will be spared to complete the battle ships already in the hands of the dockyard authorities. But the great effort of the administration is to be devoted to the construction of torpedo-boats, and the new Estimates provide for a considerable number of these small craft. A special grant has been made by the Chamber to enable the French Admiralty to purchase ironclads from private firms.

Lieutenant C. S. Smith, R.N., serving on board the Sultan, has been appointed to one of the new Vice-Consulships that are being instituted at Zanzibar under Captain C. E. Foot, R.N., with the view of more effectively putting down the slave-trade. Lieutenant Smith has already seen service on the East Coast of Africa, having previously served in the London.

The following officers have joined the Vernon for a course of instruction in torpedoes:—Lieutenant F. L. Prendergast and J. Stamper, R.M.L.I.; and Lieutenants A. H. H. Hire, W. S. Barton, L. S. Gordon, A. H. Cox, and H. Slessor, R.M.A.

We are glad to learn that Captain Fisher, C.B., who, since his appointment to the Excellent in April last, has been suffering from the effects of his recent severe illness, contracted in Egypt, has this week returned to his duties at Portsmouth, completely recovered, and hope he will now be able to reorganise the routine which obtains on board the Excellent, so much complained about by the Lieutenants of the Navy.

The semi-official Cronstadt Vestnik published an exulting article a few days ago, describing October 4 as a memorable day in the annals of the Russian Fleet, the importance of the occasion arising from two circumstances,—the successful hoisting into position of the new 150-ton crane at Cronstadt, and the successful trial trip of the new half-armoured frigate cruiser Vladimir Monomarchus, the engines of which attained a maximum speed of 16⅓ knots an hour during the trip to Revel. That cruiser the Vestnik declares to be the fastest man-of-war of the Russian fleet. The new crane at Cronstadt is of English manufacture.

Last Sunday, October 21, was the anniversary of the battle of Trafalgar, fought in 1805, when the old Victory, the last remaining ship of this memorable battle, was dressed with evergreens and flags, as is customary on this anniversary. The sole survivors of this battle are Admiral Sir George Rose Sartorius. aged 93, who was midshipman of the Tonnant during the action; Admiral Robert Patton, aged 93, midshipman of the Bellerophon; Commander William Vicary (Retired), aged 92, 1st-class Volunteer of the Achilles; and Lieutenant-Colonel James Fynmore, R.M.L.I., aged 94, who served as midshipman on board the Africa, and, subsequently joining the Royal Marines, served as a 1st Lieutenant of that distinguished corps at Lord Exmouth's victory at Algiers on August 27, 1816. During the past twelve monthe we have only had to record the death of one Trafalgar veteran, and hope it will be many years before we have to chronicle that of another of the small band. Commander Francis Harris, who served as 1st-class volunteer on board the Téméraire, died this year.

The Admiralty have ordered that in future nothing but Welsh coal shall be supplied to the ships of the Channel Squadron. This is a step in the right direction, and it is to be hoped that their Lordships will have the courage of their convictions, and extend their order to the whole service, for it is well known that Welsh steam coal, besides being smokeless, is the only reliable fuel in existence, and much superior for navigation purposes to the North-country coal which a previous Board of Admiralty ordered to be mixed with the Welsh coal used by men-of-war. This was done for political purposes,—namely, to catch a few North-country votes, and the present Board are to be congratulated on having in this instance considered the interests of the service before those of party. We only wish their Lordships would do so in all things.

A correspondent writes to correct a misapprehension about the machine-guns for the Royal Marine Light Infantry. He says:—"The facts of the case were as follows:—Some months ago, a Nordenfelt gun was supplied to the battery of the Chatham Division, the men taking very kindly to its use. The other Divisions also applied for machine-guns. It appears that there was a scarcity of Nordenfelts, and, I believe, it was considered by their Lordships that two more could not be spared. As it would be thought invidious if one Division had a gun and not the others, their Lordships decided that, for the time being, this gun should be returned into store for issue to a sea-going ship. At the recent Admiralty inspection, however, their Lordships were so much pleased with the efficiency shown by the men of the Chatham Division in gunnery, that they immediately decided, not only, I believe, that the Chatham ship gun-drill battery should have its gun back, but also that machine-guns should be supplied to the other Divisions. This is as it should be, and as one who knows the importance of these arms or weapons, I hope you will say a good word for the corps having a specimen of each. I am sure the new Deputy-Adjutant-General had nothing to do with ordering the gun into store further than passing on the order, as he appears to have the interest of the corps generally very much at heart."

A correspondent objects to the name Impérieuse being given to one of her Majesty's ships-of-war, unless that vessel was taken in action, and her name retained. L'Impérieuse, after which ship the present ironclad is called, was captured by Admiral Gell in the Mediterranean on October 11, 1793, and commissioned for the British Navy in 1795. From time to time ships captured from foreign powers have been retained in the Royal Navy under the same name, such as the Réunion, which struck her flag to the Crescent, and was purchased from her captors and added to the Navy under the same name, and many other similar instances. It would be as forcible to object to naming ships after general actions, such as Camperdown, Belleisle, Ramilies, &c., as to discontinue the names of old ships taken in action, simply because the original vessels have been condemned and broken up, to enable them to be replaced by more modern types.

General Sir Archibald Alison, K.C.B., in his speech at Glasgow, on the occasion of his being presented with a sword of honour for the Egyptian Campaign, spoke very highly of the Royal Marines and Bluejackets who served under him at Alexandria. It is always gratifying when the deeds of one branch of her Majesty's service are openly approved by a superior officer of the other side, who speaks from personal observation.

We would call the attention of the Admiralty to the fact that, out of nine First-Reserve ships in commission, five have no Gunnery Lieutenants. These ships are, nevertheless, expected to drill several hundred fleet men each, ranging from 500 to 800, and the omission to appoint a Gunnery Lieutenant for the purpose seems most unaccountable, as there are many qualified officers holding other than Gunnery appointments.

In a report upon the French Naval Estimates, we find that great attention is being paid to torpedo-boats. M. de la Porte, the author of the report in question, urges on the Admiralty the necessity of completing vessels more rapidly than at present, as under the existing system a ship is often found to be out of fashion when she is ready to go to sea for the first time. He would prefer to have a smaller number of ships on the stocks, and to finish them more quickly. He says that it is frequently found necessary to change the original plans of a vessel, which is at last completed according to several different systems, all of which are out of date. When these estimates come before Parliament, we shall have more to say about them. Suffice it to mention for the present that there is a slight reduction on the estimates of the present year, and that it is proposed to keep fewer vessels on active service, and more vessels in reserve.

With regard to the Court-martial on Commander Maxwell-Heron, the Law Officers of the Crown have reported that, if Fitzgerald's evidence were entirely eliminated from the proceedings, and disregarded, there would still be sufficient evidence to justify the conclusions at which the Court arrived.

The Indian Government has, we are informed, approved of the action taken by the India Office in regard to the Island of Perim since the date on which our correspondent wrote the particulars which appeared in our last issue.

A letter, signed "Captain, R.N.," which appeared in the Morning Post a few days ago, affords additional proof, if such were needed, of the inconveniences arising from the present system of Army organisation. "Captain, R.N.," writes as an officer of the sister-service, to complain of the difficulties which the uninitiated experience in keeping pace with the changes which have lately been introduced, with the ostensible object of rendering our Military system more workable and intelligible. We will let "Captain, R.N.," speak for himself. He says:—

> "It is, I suppose, hopeless, that among the numerous other acts of the Government—destruction of prestige in the Army—the restoration of the old time-honoured numbers of regiments will ever take place; but in one respect the ill effects of the present system may be diminished, viz., by giving in the Gazette the addition of the old regimental number to the territorial designation. When on active service I was much mixed up with the Army, though belonging myself to the sister-service, and had very many military friends in whom I was much interested, and whose career the old Army List enabled me to follow; but now I am utterly lost. I know not where to look for them; and the Gazette, which hitherto I always read with interest, is now perfectly useless. That I do not stand alone in my difficulty is shown by an officer (but very recently retired) telling me only yesterday that he is obliged to keep an old numerical list of regiments as a means of understanding the Army List and the Gazette."

"Captain, R.N.," expresses the views of ninety-nine out of every hundred persons, not biassed by considerations of personal friendship or administration for those who have inaugurated the changes in our military system of which the abandonment of numbers may be said to have been the crowning error.

The following General Order has been specially issued this week, in reference to "War Games on Models":—"The following will be added after para. 54, Sec. V., 'Queen's Regulations and Orders for the Army, 1883':—'54(a). General officers commanding districts will arrange for the carrying-out of war games at all stations where tactical models are provided. 54(b). These war games will be considered as parades, and will be conducted under the instructions contained in the "Memorandum on War Games." 54(c). General officers commanding will send a report annually on January 1 to the Adjutant-General of the Forces, showing the extent to which these games have been carried out.' In compliance with the above, the war games should be commenced at stations where models already exist, as soon as the necessary alterations to the models are completed."

The following tabular statement shows the losses sustained on a memorable occasion which was briefly described in an article in our paper of last week, namely, the landing in Aboukir Bay, on March 8, 1801:—

We find in a French paper some observations on the rate of mortality in various armies, founded upon a work due to the pen of Dr. Sormani, of the University of Pavia. It appears that the mortality per 1,000 men is, in Prussia, 5·7 per annum; in England, 8·4; in France, 9·2; in Austria, 11·2; in Italy, 11·6. The low rate of military mortality is considered all the more curious, because that country occupies only the third rank in civil mortality. Thus, England stands first, with 21·7 per 1,000 inhabitants; then France, 24·4; and Prussia, 26·9. These figures show that the Prussians take better care of their troops, and less care of the civil element, than most other nations. The French editor remarks, however, that the figures given by Dr. Sormani should be followed by some explanations; for instance, that but for suicide, which is very rife in the German Army, the mortality, instead of being 5·7, would be only 3·7 for the whole Army. In seven Army Corps out of 15, the mortality is only two or three per 1,000, and in the 11th Corps under two; that is to say, the involuntary mortality. Dr. Bordier, in dealing with these figures, thinks that the military mortality in France is far higher than it ought to be, considering that all weak and sickly youths, say, some 40,000 a year, are refused by the medical boards which inspect the conscripts before they join. Referring to another matter, he complains that while the Army Surgeons are now to wear uniform, like fighting officers, the same compliment has not been paid to the "Vets.," who, "according to the terms of the convention of Geneva, have to submit to the same fate as troops, and to go into captivity."

Though changes are being constantly made in the titles of regiments, there are still a few which require alteration. The 24th ought, for instance, to be designated the "Welsh Borderers," not "South Wales Borderers." The latter title is a misnomer, as their district includes Montgomeryshire, which is in North Wales. For the present Welsh Regiment (41st and 69th), whose head-quarters are at Cardiff, the "South Wales Regiment" would be a more appropriate title than that which it now bears. The Sherwood Foresters should not be made ridiculous by having the Derbyshire Regiment tacked on to them. "The Duke of Albany's" should precede the other titles of the Seaforth Highlanders.

Notwithstanding what may be said to the contrary, the appointment of General Gourko to Warsaw has an almost exclusively warlike character. The Germans are as fully aware of its real meaning as they are of the military preparations going on in the kingdom of Poland. The citadel of Warsaw had hitherto only six forts on the Warsaw side and one fort on the Praga side. Sixteen new forts are now in course of erection, four on the side of Praga, 12 on that of Warsaw. In the fortress of Novogeorgiewsk (Modlin) eight new forts are being constructed, and as many at Ivangorod and Brest-Litewski. There were no fortified camps in Poland. The two fortified camps of Gonssevo, in the government of Lomza, and Kouski, in the government of Radom, will be finished this year. Next year a similar camp is to be constructed at Miendzyrzycze, and in the neighbourhood of Warsaw, those of Bielanski, Povonskawski, and Mokotowski. The new railways stand in close relation to the military preparations. In Podlachia, Podolia, and the government of Kalisch, three special technical commissions are at work, planning numerous "secondary" lines. If we look to the military forces, we find four Army Corps. The Fifth Corps, under the command of General Mussin-Pushkin, has its staff at Warsaw. The Sixth Corps, commanded by General Roop, has its staff also in the capital. The Fourteenth Army Corps, General Wierowski, is concentrated at Lublin; the Guards are under the command of General Dandeville, at Warsaw. The Fourth Corps consists of two infantry divisions and one cavalry division; the Fifth Corps, of three infantry divisions and one cavalry division; the Sixth Corps, of two infantry divisions and one cavalry division. The Corps of Guards numbers in Poland four infantry and two cavalry regiments, a brigade of artillery, and a field battery. There are now permanently stationed in the kingdom eight infantry and four cavalry divisions. Those forces are supplemented by 12 battalions of artillery, four brigades of sappers, two brigades of rifles, 16 reserve battalions, and numerous other detachments of troops, such as four brigades of frontier Guards, two squadrons of gendarmery, and two squadrons of Cossacks, the latter being under the special command of the Governor-General of Warsaw. The whole Russian force in the kingdom of Poland numbers close upon 85,000 men, on a peace footing. In the face of such a concentration of troops, the Germans may well feel some apprehension.

In the midst of such wise and salutary reforms as have been engaging the mind of the officials of the War Office for some time past, there are points which have hitherto been overlooked. With the fusion—let us not call it confusion—of battalions lately consummated, has any one pictured for a moment the unfortunate position of the subaltern who, in the leap-frog days of sub-lieutenancy classification, failed to obtain a "first class," and while forfeiting his first year's actual service, was told to consider his commission as antedated? The immediate effect of that judicious arrangement on the young officer was to set a certain number of the junior officers of his own corps above him. Barely had he with shame assumed this lower seat when a system of amalgamated battalions, at a stroke, drove him some half-dozen more places down the list, and rendered all chance of promotion absolutely remote. The case of officers who have thus been punished for the errors of a system ought to be kept in view.

The opinion of the Militär Wochenblatt, quoted by the Berlin correspondent of the Times, with regard to the Mounted Infantry "fad," is consonant with that which has often been expressed in this journal. Our German contemporary has accused us of being laudator temporis acti. We plead guilty to the charge, but the adoption of Mounted Infantry which we do not advocate would be a return to the old times before the idea of the various sorts of Cavalry was developed out of the lumbering "Dragoon," with his armour and musket. There is, nevertheless, a considerable advantage in consequence of the nature of the wars in which our army is engaged, and the kind of fighting which we have to do with savages like the Zulus, Ashantees, and Arabs, or with irregulars like the Boers, to have a certain number of men in each battalion of foot trained to ride and manage firearms on horseback, so as to be able to act in lieu of cavalry, of which arm our Generals very often have no adequate supply. But at the best, they are a makeshift.

THE TRAINING BRIGS IN A GALE.

In justice to a number of officers and to our readers, who, having seen all the wonderful accounts in the "dailies" anent "The Training Brigs in a Gale," have patiently waited for an account of what happened, we publish the following special report of what really took place at Plymouth on Monday week. To begin with, the Pilot, one of those mentioned, anchored early in the afternoon, with the Nautilus, out by the breakwater, and rode out the gale in perfect safety. About 2 o'clock, the Sealark came in from Falmouth, and with a fresh breeze and strong flood tide furled sails and came up to her buoy under the jib, lowered her boat and picked up the buoy; but the hawser (a 6-in. coir) parted, when she immediately let go her first anchor, in about 13 fathoms, very bad holding-ground (the buoys are placed on the extreme edge of a five-fathom bank, which drops at once to 13 and 18 fathoms), and as it did not at once bring her up, she let go a second anchor, and brought up well clear of the rocks off the harbour-master's house. The brigs until this year were supplied with an 8-in. coir, but the establishment has been reduced to a 6-in., in the face of the strongest remonstrances from the lieutenants in command. In a five-oared whaler, with a crew of boys, it is impossible to lay out a hemp hawser. Next came the Martin, under double-reefed topsails. She was hove to in a most masterly manner close to her buoy, but the boat, manned by boys, was unfortunately rather slack in getting clear of the ship, and missed hooking on the hawser. The brig stopped dead for fully two minutes, and no man could have brought her in better. She then shortened sail, and directly she was clear of the buoy's moorings let go first anchor, then second; but holding-ground being bad, drifted towards Sealark, and when she brought up, her stern was just touching Sealark's bow, and the latter sprang her bumpkin, whilst the former had her hammock-nettings knocked about a little. The Liberty then came in, dropped her anchor close to her buoy, chancing fouling the moorings, and hauled to the buoy. In the meantime, the Sealark and Martin, being hidden from Mount Wise, Seaflower, at anchor all the time on Asia shoal, made signal for a tug for them, and fired guns to attract attention and make certain of tug coming as soon as possible. Tugs came out and towed Sealark and Martin to position of safety, and by this time, 6 p.m., wind having freshened to a gale and a heavy sea rolling in, the Seaflower, although she had let go a second anchor and veered to a good scope on both cables, finding she was dragging slightly off the bank, and, therefore, into deeper water, obtained the assistance of a tug by firing a few more guns, and slipping one cable, weighed the other anchor, and was towed out into the Sound. After all was over, the Commander-in-Chief came out in a Great Western Company's tug, to assure himself personally that all were safely moored. The anchors and cables were picked up during the next day or two. Our correspondent also writes as follows:—"Every seaman knows that to bring a ship well to her buoy is one of the 'nicest' evolutions possible. You have to depend on so many people,—on your boat's crew, on your quartermaster, on your hands shortening sail exactly at the right moment, and on your hawser. A boy thinks nothing of letting go a topsail sheet or the throat halyards, instead of the fore brace, though these boys are wonderfully good, considering the short time they are under training, and they work right well and willingly."

H.M.S. FIRM ON SHORE.

The Firm, Lieut. and Com. George Izat, while anchored at Kirkwall, on Thursday, was driven ashore during a north-west gale. She struck on the point of the Mount, a short distance from the pier, when the sea made a complete breach over the ship. The Lord Warden, Capt. Kennedy, anchored in the same bay, also dragged her anchors, but at once got up steam to render every possible assistance to her tender, whose crew, however, succeeded at high water in heaving the gunboat off, when she was anchored in dead water. No damage is reported.

NELSON'S SIGNAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—With reference to a late discussion alluded to in your paper about the exact words of Lord Nelson's signal at Trafalgar, it may be interesting to know that I have in my possession a seal which belonged to Admiral Lord Collingwood. It is a three-sided crystal, and on one side is the following,—"England expects everything! Men, do your duty." Are not these likely to have been the exact words of the original signal?—I am, &c.,

H.M.S. UNDINE.

With reference to the telegram in Tuesday's papers respecting H.M.'s schooner Undine, Admiral Sir William Hewett reported, under date Sept. 10, from Zanzibar, that the vessel left Mozambique for Tamatave on Aug. 31, and was to return to Mozambique, whence she would be recalled to Zanzibar. Sir William Hewett reports Oct. 23 that calms and light winds have prevailed during the month of September. This may probably account for the length of the passage, the Undine being a sailing vessel. Sir William Hewett reports having despatched four vessels to examine the islands and coasts of Madagascar. Mail communication with the Undine has been uncertain, and there is no telegraph to Madagascar. It is quite possible that she may be carrying out her orders, and may not be heard of for some time.

Admiralty, October 25.

ADMIRAL WAKE ON THE NAVY.

In responding for the Navy, at a public dinner, at Devonport, during the past week, Admiral C. Wake, after speaking of the relative strength of the British Navy, as compared with that of other Powers 50 years ago and at the present day, arrived at the conclusion that at the earlier date we had more ships than the rest of the world put together, whereas, in another year, France alone will have a superior Naval force to that of England. He does not attribute the fault to any Board of Admiralty, for they, "he believed, would build ships as fast as the people would supply them with money, and would be delighted to have some excuse for giving orders for more ships to be built. But the English people were the only people who grudged money for their own security. France, Germany, and Italy submitted to heavy taxation to maintain a large Navy, in addition to a large Army, and England was the only country that stuck steadily to ten or eleven millions for the Navy." Thus the fault of an inferior Navy in the matter of its matériel is justly laid to the country at large. If constituencies are continually urging upon their representatives in Parliament the most stringent economy and reduction in the Army and Navy, the hands of their rulers are tied, action is restrained, and inefficiency the result. This may not be of much consequence in time of peace, but it would be a sad awakening, in the event of a short and sharp European war, for our large shipping companies, with their thousands of ships bearing cargoes of untold wealth, to find their home ports blockaded by an enemy's fleet, and their vessels chased over the ocean, with no friendly harbour under their lee, to be captured in detail, like helpless chickens before the fox in a farmyard. It is to be hoped that this is an extreme view to take of matters; but to be forewarned is to be forearmed, and it would be wiser, with the enormous wealth of England, to spend a larger annual sum for sure protection than to cripple our means of defence at the risk of a defeat, with a possible result not only in the loss of a few ironclads, but the investment of our seaport towns; a national humiliation, and a ruinous sacrifice would be the price the country would have to pay to purchase a subsequent peace. Admiral Wake says that what we have to expect from the Navy, if we went to war, is security from invasion, protection of our possessions all through the world, and protection for the enormous commerce which is the very life-blood of the country; and the means to fulfil these requirements should not be a doubtful matter. Our officers and seamen would do anything and go anywhere, but the English people must find them ships in which to discharge their all-important duties.

On Friday last, the Arethusa, the second of the three twin-screw second-class steam steel cruisers, built and engined by Messrs. Robert Napier and Sons, was taken from Sheerness to the Maplin Sands, for her full-power trial of machinery, prior to being received by the Admiralty. The engines throughout the whole of the six hours worked in a satisfactory manner. This vessel has two separate engine-rooms and two stoke-holes, with water-tight doors between them, the latter containing eight single-ended steel boilers, each working at a pressure of 90 lb. Messrs. Napier have already finished the Leander, a sister-ship, which is now fitting at Chatham. The Phaeton is also approaching completion at their works, and will be tried in December.

Messrs. Burroughes and Watts, the well-known manufacturers of billiard-tables, &c., have just completed one which is to be included in the forthcoming exhibition at Calcutta. The table is composed of solid oak, well seasoned, and ingrained with gold; while all its appendages, such as marking-boards, cues, &c., are specimens of high-class workmanship. There is one artful contrivance in dealing with "chalk," which, no doubt, will be highly approved of, and which will prevent many growls of dissatisfaction. There is also a novelty in the mode of finding your cue without the slightest difficulty. We understand that the table has already been tried, and pronounced upon most favourably by some of the experts in billiards. In due time, we shall hear of adventures on the outward-bound voyage, and what impression it has caused in Calcutta.

EGYPTIAN NOTES.

Cairo, October 13, 1883.

The entries into hospital for the week are 111, of which seven are officers. Of these, the Royal Highlanders contribute 18, King's Royal Rifle Corps 17, Cameron Highlanders 14, Royal Sussex Regiment 12, Gordon Highlanders 10, Duke of Cornwall's L.I. 9, and sundries 31.

It will be observed that there is a very startling and satisfactory improvement in the health of the Duke of Cornwall's L.I., which has renounced the errors of its ways, and shows a per-centage of sick actually below the average. Opinions vary as to whether this formidable result is caused by exuberance of spirits at the prospect of their speedy departure, or by the diminished comfort of hospital life under canvas.

Rumour, which has in turn selected every regiment as the first to be withdrawn, now steadily asserts that the 46th will receive its sailing orders next Wednesday, together with the Gordons and another, which are all to leave before the end of November.

The reduction of the force by at least 3,000 men is earnestly to be recommended, in the interest of the Egyptians; it would be an invidious and difficult task to name the regiments whose withdrawal would cause most despair amongst the Europeans.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

There have been no General parades or Divisional operations of any kind here since the inspection by the Commander-in-Chief on the 8th inst.

Duties will press heavily on the very small garrison here during the winter months, as there seems but little probability of an augmentation of the strength of the Division for some time to come. The withdrawal of the 84th York and Lancaster Regiment has reduced the strength of the command by nearly 1,000 effectives.

The Inspector-General of Fortifications made a thorough inspection of the Royal Engineer Troops and Companies here on Tuesday and Wednesday. The Royal Engineers have certainly had enough and to spare of inspections during the past month, and as a working corps their services have been of little value during this period. They have been inspected by their commanding officer, Colonel Jones, Sir Howard Elphinstone, C.R.E., Sir Frederick Fitz-Wygram, the Commander-in-Chief, and, finally, by Sir Andrew Clarke. This corps having now been found, it is to be hoped, ready to go anywhere and do anything, the men will probably be allowed to take up some useful duties in the meantime, and a proportion of the corps sent on furlough to see their friends, before hostilities break out.

As evidence of the liveliness that prevails here just now, it may be mentioned that one of the most important announcements in the printed Division Orders during the week was that a tabby kitten had been lost by a commanding officer, who was anxious to recover it.

Veterinary-Surgeon (1st Class) E. T. Cheesman assumed the duties of Veterinary-Surgeon to the Staff, and Instructor at the Army Veterinary School, on the 20th instant, vice Inspecting Veterinary-Surgeon W. B. Walters, ordered to Dublin.

Lieutenants Ward, 26th Cameronians, Healy, Greenway, and Jenkins, 39th Regiment, and Lawrence, 31st Regiment, have been examined for promotion in subjects (a) and (b), section 4, paragraph 37, Queen's Regulations, and have been found qualified.

Captain Sherrard, 80th Regiment, and Lieutenants Stamer, 16th Lancers, and Lynch-Blosse, 84th Regiment, will join the Garrison Instruction Class on the 1st proximo.

THE CASPIAN FLEET.

Great changes are impending in the Caspian Fleet. Now that the Turcomans have been crushed, and Russia rendered sole mistress of the sea, all need for a powerful armament has passed away, and there is a talk of abolishing the fleet altogether, just as has recently been the fate of the Aral Fleet. The Caspian Fleet consists of three gunboats, the Tinlin, Saikeera, and Peestchal, of which the Tinlin, constructed in 1860, and having a tonnage of 206 tons, a draught of 6 feet, and engines of 40 horse-power, will give an idea of the class. Then follow four armed steamers, the Nasr-Eddin Shah, the Baku, the Araxes, and the Tchikishlar, the first being of 537 tons, 160 horse-power, seven feet draught, and carrying seven small guns. The Nasr-Eddin Shah was built twenty-seven years ago, the Tchikishlar was purchased from the Caucasus and Mercury Company in 1880. The rest of the fleet is made up of the transports Krasnovodsk and Geok Tepé, added last year, in place of two vessels broken up, the transport Aist, the screw-schooners Lotsman and Tchaika, and the steam barges Bistree, Provorni, Nerok, Baklan, and Gagara, together with a few sailing barges and cutters. The personnel consists of 71 officers and 700 men. The head-quarters are situated at Baku, where there is a fine dockyard.

FRENCH MERCHANT-CRUISERS.

It will be remembered that some time ago the French Government offered a bounty of 15 per cent. on the first cost of such French-built merchant-steamers as should comply, as regards construction of hull, &c., with certain regulations issued by the Marine authorities, which would enable ships thus constructed being converted into auxiliary cruisers in time of war. The Château Margaux and Château Yquem, two of the latest additions to the fleet of the Compagnie Bordelaise de Navigation à Vapeur, are the first vessels built to fulfil these requirements. They are 381 ft. 6 in. long, 41 ft. wide, 31 ft. 10 in. deep; have a draft of 20 ft. 8 in., a displacement of 6,500 tons, and engines of 2,800 indicated horse-power. Should occasion arise, they will each be armed with two 9½-in. and four smaller guns. One of the conditions laid down by Government is that the vessels should be capable of steaming a long distance at a mean speed of 14 knots per hour. In introducing this class of hybrid-cruiser into her fighting Navy, France has only followed the example of our own Admiralty, yet the fact is none the less surprising. The war navy of France has at the present moment so nearly approached in force that of England, and is in so efficient a state, that it is unnecessary for a conscience-smitten Minister of Marine to draw the attention of an easily-satisfied Chamber of Representatives to "our magnificent fleet of auxiliary cruisers." Such being the case, it is to be presumed that in order to justify the expenditure of public money in bounties on vessels built in France, it has been necessary to find some excuse for doing so. Taking into consideration the few Colonial possessions and insignificant merchant navy of France, when compared with her powerful fleet of unarmoured cruisers, (56 of which are of upwards of 1,000 tons displacement, besides 114 smaller vessels, and a large number of armed transports), there can be no doubt that in time of war she will entrust the duty of "police of the seas" to something far better than steam-packets. Be that, however, as it may, the French have certainly in the item of armament made their auxiliary cruisers more than a match for their British class-mates, for while the former carry heavy breech-loading guns of modern design, the latter are armed with obsolete 68-pounders. It has always been the custom of English governments, when interrogated as to the strength and condition of the Navy, to compare it with that of France, with the result, of course, that the former is found to be slightly numerically superior to the latter. This is generally sufficient to set at rest the doubts of the nation at large, and only those who inquire a little closer into the matter will perceive the utter fallacy of such a comparison. To form a correct estimation of the fighting power of a navy, it is necessary first of all to consider the various duties which the same would have to perform in time of war, such as the protection of colonies, convoys, &c. Now supposing that hostilities were at the present moment to break out between France and Great Britain, it would be found that so long as operations were confined to European waters, our Navy would be possessed of a convenient working majority. The moment, however, it should become known in England that a powerful French squadron had sailed from Europe, it would become necessary to despatch the greater portion of our fleet to every portion of the globe, for the protection of our Colonies and commerce. Under such circumstances, the deficiency of the British Navy in swift and heavily-armed cruisers would be terribly felt. At present the French Navy includes 14 frigates and corvettes with speeds of 15 knots and upwards, the smallest of which would probably prove more than a match for any three auxiliary cruisers. Yet it is on these vessels that our merchant navy would be chiefly dependent for protection, for to oppose the 14 swift ships of war of the French we have only 16 vessels of the same class and speed. This number is perfectly inadequate either to blockade the enemy's cruisers in port or, should they succeed in putting to sea, to prevent their prying upon our merchant-vessels and auxiliary cruisers. An estimate of the amount of protection duty to be performed by our fleet may be formed from the fact that the ratio of ships of war to merchant-vessels is 1·13 for France and 1·63 for Great Britain. It should be remembered that the inability of the Federal Government for so long a time to put an end to the depredations of the Alabama was not owing to the deficiency of their Navy in ships of war or auxiliary cruisers, but to the want of suitable vessels of the necessary speed and armament. The Alabama was the only regular man-of-war cruiser in the service of the Confederate States, yet the North found it necessary to build some 15 vessels for the sole purpose of capturing her, the Hatteras affair having proved the inability of transformed merchant-steamers to cope with regularly built men-of-war.

THE NEW SEBASTOPOL.

Admiral Shestiakoff, the Russian Minister of Marine, has left St. Petersburg for the Black Sea and Caspian, to make an inspection of the naval establishments in those waters. Until his arrival, the question has been left undecided whether the head-quarters of the Black-Sea Fleet shall be retained at Nicolaeff or shifted to Sebastopol. For some time past a trimming policy has been pursued, as an illustration of which we may mention the circumstance of two of the four new ironclads of the Inflexible type being given to Nicolaeff to build and two to the Sebastopol authorities. Sentiment, however, and superiority of site are in favour of Sebastopol, and now that the town is rapidly emerging from its ruins, the chances of a restoration are becoming greater. A few years ago, the Governor of the Crimea reported that there were 70 per cent. of ruins and 30 of habitable houses in Sebastopol. This year he has reported that the figures have become transposed, and that there are now only 30 per cent. of ruins to 70 per cent. of houses. Handsome thoroughfares are being cut through the town and well paved, and extensive manufactories are rising at various points about the bay. The restoration of the great stone dock, involving an outlay of a quarter of a million sterling, will be finished this year.

Admiral Sir A. H. Hoskins, K.C.B., and other Naval officers, visited Aldershot on Monday for the purpose of witnessing the operations of the Army Hospital Corps, and of judging of the comparative merits of the system with that proposed to be adopted in the Navy. A large hospital marquee was erected on the parade-ground, and some distance off receiving tents for the wounded were pitched and fitted with all necessary appliances. The men supposed to be wounded were carried from different parts of the hills around by parties detailed for the purpose, and others were placed on mules and brought to the tents, where they were attended to by officers of the Army Medical Department. Then, preceded by a large white flag bearing the Geneva Cross, the wounded train, driven by men of the Army Service Corps and with an armed escort, was conducted to the hospital. The operations lasted the whole of the morning, and were watched with great interest.

LORD NORTHBROOK'S NAVAL POLICY.

The First Lord of the Admiralty, speaking at a dinner given by the Mayor and Corporation of Winchester on Tuesday, said, in acknowledging the toast of "The Navy":—"I hope it will not be thought out of place if I say a few words as to the impression produced upon the Board of Admiralty by the inspections in which we have been recently engaged. The most important element of the Naval strength of the country consists, undoubtedly, in the number and in the efficiency of the men who man our ships and of the officers who command them. We have found that plenty of fine young lads are ready to enter the service, and that the arrangements for training the boys and young seamen are well carried out. The principal work in training our seamen afloat is done by the Channel Squadron, which we inspected last week at Portland. It is ably commanded by Sir William Dowell. The six ships of which it is composed are in a high state of efficiency, and a force of 2,500 seamen and Marines landed from them gave ample proof of the care which had been bestowed upon their training by their officers. We found all the divisions of Marines in perfect order. The spirit infused by the really good work done by the seamen and Marines at Alexandria and in the Suez Canal last year has obviously been of great advantage to all ranks of the service. The superior officers gave us an excellent report of the young officers serving under them, and of the discipline of the men. Touching for a moment upon the Reserves, we inspected in the summer the Reserve Squadron, in which the Coastguardsmen, the First Reserve of the Fleet, were embarked for their annual training under Sir Anthony Hoskins, and we were much gratified by their appearance and by his report of their efficiency, while we have no difficulty in keeping up the Second Reserve by volunteers from the mercantile marine and the seafaring population. Turning from the officers and men, whose spirit and condition leave nothing to be desired, to the ships-of-war and the dockyards in which they are built and repaired, we found satisfactory progress everywhere, and we expect to realise it in the Estimates framed in the beginning of the year. The armour-plated ships under construction are being pushed rapidly on. Their guns have been settled, and most of the complicated questions of detail with respect to the gun-mountings have been decided. You may like to hear something of the armour-plated ships which have been recently launched, and are either just completed, or are now being completed for sea. The trial of the guns of the Ajax and the Agamemnon was very successful, and the speed of the Conqueror and Edinburgh comes fully up to the anticipations of their designers. These ships were laid down four or five years ago by our predecessors, and it is, therefore, of course, to them, and not to us, that any credit for their success is due. It would be trespassing too much on your patience if I were to discuss the types of the ships we have laid down. The art of shipbuilding, as applied to ships-of-war, is peculiarly open to criticism, because of the various qualities which such ships are required to possess. I suppose a perfect fighting ship of the present day should have very high speed and carry a great supply of coal. She must be protected by armour against the heaviest guns known, and be armed herself with the heaviest guns, as well as with all the latest inventions for discharging torpedoes. Moreover, she must have a moderate draft of water, and be handy to turn. I need hardly say that it would be impossible to produce such a ship, and the real question is which of the various desirable qualities must be sacrificed? We have reason to think that the ships we are building are not inferior to those of other nations. Indeed, I venture to express a confident expectation that our Naval architects and engineers will show themselves as superior in building ships-of-war as they have in building those magnificent merchant steamers which bear the British flag in such preponderating numbers to all parts of the world. I should like to say just a few words about guns. I have noticed, occasionally, depreciatory remarks about the guns in our ships, because until very lately they have been muzzle-loaders. It is said that muzzle-loading guns are very inferior to breech-loading guns, and the inference is drawn that because the breech-loading system was adopted in some foreign navies before we adopted it, their ships carry better guns than ours. This is a mistake—a muzzle-loading gun constructed a few years ago was just as good as a breech-loading gun of the same period, weight for weight. It is the recent improvements in artillery which have given in new guns a superiority to the system of loading at the breech, which has made the adoption of that system a necessity for Naval service. With these improvements, charges can be used with less risk, and in order to take advantage of the new powder, the powder-chamber was made wider than the box of the gun, which made breech-loaders far more convenient than muzzle-loaders. Lastly, the barrel was lengthened, so as to give full force upon the shot to the larger charge of powder. This forced the adoption of breech-loading for long guns when used in the broadsides of ships. These new guns are just as superior to the old breech-loaders as they are to the old muzzle-loaders; and, in fact, the old guns afloat of the same date, whether loaded at the breech or at the muzzle, are pretty equal, and the new breech-loading guns which we and other nations are now constructing are greatly superior to either. Guns weighing 43 tons of the new type are being supplied to our ships which are now completing. I saw two of them working very well in the turrets of the Conqueror, and two more are on board the Colossus. Larger guns have been ordered, and will follow in due course, as we want them for other ships, and we do not expect that we shall be delayed in completing them from want of the guns, whether supplied by the War Office, whose officers are working vigorously to assist us, or by Sir William Armstrong at Elswick. We are now beginning to move quickly. These new guns, however, are very costly, and we must be prepared for heavy artillery estimates until the Fleet is fully equipped with them. These questions, affecting the efficiency of the Navy, are deeply interesting to all Englishmen. I trust, therefore, I may be excused in having occupied your time by making these few remarks, and I beg to assure you, in conclusion, that while you may confidently rely upon the officers of her Majesty's Navy to do their duty, the Board of Admiralty and her Majesty's Government are fully sensible of their responsibility for the maintenance of the Naval superiority of Great Britain."

MANNING THE NAVY.

The supply of boys for the Navy having fallen short of the requirements of the service, the Admiralty have directed Capt. W. R. Kennedy, commanding the Leith Coastguard District, to proceed in the Lord Warden to the Shetland Islands, and endeavour, while establishing cordial relations between the fishermen of these isles, to bring more forcibly before them the advantages of the service, so that in future the Shetlands may become a reliable recruiting-ground for the Navy, as suggested some time back by Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, who, having formed a very flattering opinion of the appearance and bearing of these hardy islanders, strongly recommended the Admiralty to endeavour to induce them to join the service. Capt. W. R. Kennedy, commanding the Reserves in North Britain, is of the same opinion as the Duke of Edinburgh, and on Saturday last, after inspecting the Naval Reserves in Fort Charlotte, at Lerwick, "spun them a yarn," in what the local paper, the Shetland Times, calls "a frank and sailor-like style." We regret that we have not space at our disposal to reproduce the whole of Capt. Kennedy's remarkably good address to the men of Lerwick. But the following passages will be read with interest, and might be used with profit by others, in their endeavours to get seamen to join the Navy as a profession. Having addressed a few kindly words of greeting to the men assembled, Capt. Kennedy proceeded as follows:—"The Lords of the Admiralty, being convinced that it would be desirable to recruit the service from the Orkneys and the Shetlands, sent me here in the Lord Warden, and here we are. The object of our visit is not so much to induce a lot of boys to embark right away, as to put before you, the parents of growing lads, the immense and important advantages of the Naval service over every other service or employment, either public or private, in any part of the world. . . . . . Now, when we came here this time, I was assured that not a boy could be got for the Navy,—that the herring-fishing had been so wonderfully good that the boys could earn more at that, and therefore their parents could not spare them. This may be so, for up to the present time the specimens sent aboard do not come up to our requirements, nor do they reflect credit upon the inhabitants of this land. I have here a list of seven applicants who have been rejected for the following reasons:—1, Chest deformed; 2, chest and height measurement insufficient for his age; 3, the same reason, and chest also slightly deformed; 4, under measurement and myopia (short-sighted); 5, eight teeth lost and defective; 6, cardiac dilatation and six defective teeth; 7, chest deformed and six defective teeth. Now, I ask you, are those the true representatives of the men of this country, and do they come up to the conditions mentioned in the placards which you have before you? No. The Navy is not the refuge for the destitute; we are not forced to go into the highways and byways and seek out the cripples, the blind, and the toothless. On the contrary, the Navy is so popular that the supply is more than the demand; but when we see our way to getting boys of a good, healthy stock, we are glad to do so; but we must draw the line somewhere. . . . . . No; these are not the style of lads we require. I am told that now is a bad time, and that the lads are home in the country; but I hope that by-and-by the advantages of the Naval service will reach them also, and that some of the right sort will apply. I have heard that so great a fright was caused by the press-gang in olden times that the dread of it has never been forgotten, and that this may account for the absence of volunteers from these islands. But the days of the press-gang are passed for ever. A boy enters now with the full consent of his parents; he signs an agreement for ten years, at the expiration of which he can go if he chooses, but if he is wise he will do nothing of the sort, for the reason that after ten years' service he gets no pension, whereas after twenty years' he gets a pension of from £18 to £50 per annum for the rest of his life. So that, counting from the time he is 18 years old, when his man's time begins, he would obtain his pension when he is 38, or allowing for a spell at home of a couple of years or so, say at 40 years of age. Now, where, I should like to know, could a man find employment which offers such splendid prospects? Fancy being able to retire into private life at the age of 40 (the prime of life for a Shetlander), with £40 or £50 a year in your pocket for the rest of your life, and no need to do any work again except, in a quiet way! This pension represents roughly £1,000, or the interest on that sum. Now, I would ask, would it be possible for any working-man to save such a sum as that? You could not earn that at the fishing, I take it; certainly not in the Merchant Service, nor in any other employ, certainly not soldiering. There is only one service that offers such advantages, and that is the Navy."

The annual Balaclava dinner took place at Willis's Rooms, on Thursday. Present—Gens. Earl of Lucan, Sir E. C. Hodge, Clarke, Sir T. McMahon, Sir C. P. B. Walker, Shute, and Godman; Lord Tredegar, Lord Bingham; Deputy-Inspector-Gen. Anderson; Surg.-Gen. Mouat, C.B., V.C.; Cols. Sir W. Gordon, Duberley, Ferguson, Swinfen, Prendergast, and Davies; Majors Manley, Coney, Wilkins, and McCreagh; Capts. Halford, Teevan, Rowe, and Scott.

The Army.

1st (King's) Dragoon Guards. The adjutancy has again become vacant by the death of Lieut. Waters, which occurred in India. The deceased took up the appointment on May 16 last.

4th Dragoon Guards. The grand military tournament given by the regiment in Preston Park, Brighton, concluded last week. The amount realised for the charities is about £200. Lieut.-Gen. Sir Frederick FitzWygram, Inspector-Gen. of Cavalry, was present on the 13th. The tournament included driving drill, with two model nine-pounder field-guns. The drill was admirably carried out, the audience warmly applauding as the pegs were passed clear in galloping. The musical rides, which were shown in York in 1879, were repeated with many novel and practical movements. They were much appreciated. Both men and horses worked with admirable precision, the spectators closely watching each change of figure, each turn and wheel, expressing their approbation repeatedly. The leaping by a troop of horses over flights of hurdles greatly pleased those present. Lieut.-Col. Shaw-Hellier and the officers, who officiated as stewards, &c., and the hon. secretary, Rdgmr. Horton, deserve all praise for the manner in which the sports were carried out.

The depôt fired their return match against the Ayr Rifle Volunteers at Monkton Range, on the 20th inst. 107th Royal Sussex Regiment. It is expected that the regiment will remain at Malta, and not return to England, as was expected.

Pay Department. "A. P. D." writes :—"I venture to send a few remarks on the subject of the pay in India of the officers of the Army Pay Department holding the rank of major. These officers in England draw the same pay and allowances as a regimental lieutenant-colonel, whose pay in India is 1,022 rupees a month ; whilst the Army Pay Department officer has to be content, or rather discontented, with 506 rupees, barely more than the pay of a captain ; in fact, by serving in India, he loses all the benefit of the late Royal Warrant. This is distinctly at variance with par. 3 of Order in Council, No. 1,084, of November 9, 1878 (in modification of No. 765 of 1866, No. 969 of 1868, and No. 1,086 of 1876), which lays down the conditions under which the officers of the Army Pay Department will serve in India, and which states that 'the rank enjoyed by them will carry all precedence and advantages of the military rank to which it corresponds.' Again, when the question was asked in the House of Commons as to why the officers of the Army Pay Department who in England draw considerably more pay than the junior regimental majors, should in India draw very much less, the reply was that the former, not having the rank of field-officers, could not draw the pay and allowances of that rank. This objection does not exist now, and the anomaly of a paymaster with the rank of major drawing over 130 rupees a month less than any other officer of the same rank in India should be done away with, especially as he has, in nearly every case, much longer service than the regimental officer, and also be it remembered that the rate of pay laid down to be drawn by the officers of the Army Pay Department is not more than two-thirds of that drawn by paymasters before the formation of the Department. It appears to me only a truism to say that officers should either receive the pay and allowances of their rank, or not be required to serve in a country where they are denied them."

VOLUNTEERS.

3rd Aberdeenshire Rifles. The battalion has just completed its prize meeting. There was a long list of prizes. All the arrangements were complete, and everything went like clockwork. Praise is due to the indefatigable attention and energy of Major Robertson, adjt. of the battalion, and to Col. Fordyce, commanding officer. In the squad firing for the commanding officer's cup, which was the chief event of the meeting, the prize fell to the Old Deer Company.

York and Lancaster Regiment. A prize meeting of the 2nd Volunteer Battalion took place at the rifle range, Doncaster Race Common, on the 18th inst. Capt. Somerville was in charge all day. In A contest, the winner of the 1st prize and badge was C (Capt. Elwis's) Compy., of the Doncaster Detachment. In B Contest, the winner of the 1st prize was D (Capt. Somerville's) Compy., of the Doncaster Detachment. In C Contest, the Harrison Memorial Vase was won by the B Compy. of the Rotherham Detachment; the badge by Colour-Serjt. Frith, of the same company.

The Admiralty have issued instructions to fit the whole of the ships of the Channel Squadron with Sir W. Thomson's patent automatic sounding machine.

The Lords of the Admiralty arrived at Devonport in the Enchantress on Monday, on their annual visit of inspection. After examining the dockyard accounts and estimates they boarded the Hecate, turret-ship, and inspected the superstructure recently fitted to give her increased stability, and provide additional accommodation for the crew. Their Lordships subsequently visited the new Naval barracks at Keyham, where they were engaged for a long time in determining upon the fittings of the rooms, and considering plans relating to the other blocks remaining to be erected. They afterwards inspected the Engineer Students' College, and in the afternoon inspected the men of the Steam Reserve, and visited the Iron Duke, Bellerophon, and Raleigh, for the purpose of deciding upon their armament. Their Lordships also inspected the Royal Marines in barracks and visited the Royal Victualling Yard. In the evening they gave an official dinner on board the Enchantress to the principal Naval officers, and a reception was held by Admiral H. Stewart at Admiralty House.

Lord Northbrook has written to Capt. Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 27, 1883.

SIR PATRICK GRANT'S selection for the bâton of a Field-Marshal is the twenty-seventh that has been made during the present reign, the first appointment after the accession of her Majesty being that of the Prince Consort, who was created a Field-Marshal on February 8, 1840, two days before his marriage. His fellow-Marshals at that time were the Duke of Wellington, the King of Hanover, the late Duke of Cambridge, and the King of the Belgians. No further addition to this list was made until July, 1845, when the King of the Netherlands was selected for a bâton,—an honour he could well lay claim to, seeing that, as the Prince of Orange, he had been on the Iron Duke's Staff as extra Aide-de-Camp in the Peninsula, from 1811 to the end of the war in 1814, and had commanded the Dutch troops in the campaign of 1815, and the First Corps d'Armée of the Duke of Wellington's forces at the battle of Waterloo, receiving a shot through the left shoulder at the close of the battle. The next appointments were gazetted on November 9, 1846, the birthday of the five-year-old Prince of Wales, when Sir George Nugent, Bart., General Thomas Grosvenor, and the Marquis of Anglesey were given bâtons,—very late in life in the cases of the two former, who were old comrades in arms of the Duke of York in Holland and Flanders. Sir George Nugent was appointed at ninety years of age, and at the close of a military career which had commenced as far back as 1773. The list of Field-Marshals was then allowed to dwindle down to three, viz., the King of the Belgians, Prince Albert, and the Marquis of Anglesey, until in 1854 the Crimean services of Lord Raglan, and the fact that he was in command of the largest army we had placed in the field since the days of the Peninsula, led to his appointment as a Marshal of our Empire. In October, 1855, three most distinguished additions to the list were made in Lord Hardinge, at that time Commander-in-Chief, Lord Combermere, and Lord Strafford, a trio of Wellington's ablest lieutenants in the old wars. The first-named only enjoyed the honour a twelvemonth, as he died in 1856. No further appointment took place until April, 1860, when Lord Seaton, the Sir John Colborne of the famous 52nd, was selected for an honour which, in his case, was awarded somewhat tardily, when it is remembered what services he had performed. On November 9, 1862, the day of a big Brevet and a multitude of promotions in honour of the Prince of Wales attaining his majority, bâtons were conferred on the Duke of Cambridge, Hugh, Viscount Gough, Colin Campbell, Lord Clyde, and Sir Edward Blakeney. The next Field-Marshals' Gazette was issued on January 1, 1868, when four General Officers, viz., Sir Alexander Woodford, Sir William Maynard Gomm, Sir John Fox Burgoyne, and Sir Hew Dalrymple Ross were selected. The last-named, a gunner of note in the Peninsula, and the first Artilleryman thus honoured, died within the year, the honour, as has so often been pointed out in these columns, being in his case, as in those of so many others, bestowed too late in life to be really appreciated. An exceptional appointment, and one which caused the liveliest gratification to the Indian Army, was made on the Queen's birthday in May, 1870, when Sir George Pollock, the hero of the first Afghan war and practical saviour of India, at a critical period of our hold on the East, was gazetted. Five years later, death having reduced the list to a solitary individual, the Duke of Cambridge, fresh appointments were made in the Prince of Wales and two octogenarian Generals in Sir John Forster Fitzgerald, aged eighty-nine, and the Marquis of Tweeddale, aged eighty-seven. The next batch of creations is found on June 2, 1877, in Generals Sir William Rowan, Sir Charles York, and Hugh Rose, Lord Strathnairn. The first-named, who was honoured at eighty-eight years, died two years later, and his old comrade, the veteran Constable of the Tower, did not long survive him. The remaining appointments have been those of Lord Napier of Magdala and Sir Patrick Grant.

The promotion of General Sir Patrick Grant to the rank of Field-Marshal is a most gracious act, and will give no small satisfaction to the Indian Army, with which Sir Patrick was identified prior to 1862, when he was transferred to the Imperial establishment, on the amalgamation. The old John Company's Army has two of its representatives now in the possession of Field-Marshal's bâtons, Lord Napier of Magdala having also been a "Local Officer" prior to 1862. The promotion of Sir Patrick Grant leaves only one vacancy on the list of Field-Marshals, the establishment of which has been fixed by the Royal Warrant of 1881 at six.

We believe that Major-General Cameron, commanding the Northern District, has been instructed to institute a private inquiry into the circumstances in connection with the case against Colour-Serjeant Malins, 3rd Battalion, King's (Shropshire Light Infantry). Having regard to all the facts of the case, we do not anticipate from the inquiry any useful result.

Attention has been frequently called more than once to the great and growing disinclination which combatant officers exhibit to enter the Pay Department, and several proposals have been made with a view to remedy this state of things. The present condition of the Department may, perhaps, be accounted for by the fact that every vacancy is a distinct saving in the Estimates, inasmuch as while the pay of a Committee of Paymastership is only 10s. a day, that of a Paymaster commences at 15s. As the Pay Department is now about 40 below its establishment, the saving under this head amounts to some £10 a day, and as the present administration of the War Office is great at small economies, it is not unlikely that it is this saving which causes it to view with such complacency the apathy of officers to exchange the sword for the pen. But there is another aspect of the case. Regiments and regimental districts are not in these days overburdened with officers, and as, whenever the services of a paymaster are not available, one officer is usually struck off all other duties to do his work, Colonels who are without a paymaster not unnaturally protest most vigorously against one of their few duty officers being taken away from his proper work for an indefinite period. A remedy for the evil ought to be found, for it clearly is most unfair to expect commanding officers properly to keep up the efficiency of their regiments, whilst labouring under disadvantages which were unknown in the old days, when non-commissioned officers were more experienced, if not more trustworthy, than those now available.

One of the noticeable things at a recent Aldershot inspection was the new valise equipment carried by some of the Infantry regiments. As some of the battalions carried the old valise equipment, it was possible to contrast one with the other. The peculiarity of the new valise is that it carries the great-coat inside, and that the valise is not a bag, but opens out for packing. This latter novelty is an improvement, as it enables the soldier to get at anything more easily than in a bag valise. The new valise is worn rather low down, and on it is placed the canteen. The service kit is reduced to the narrowest dimensions, but the folly of carrying a second pair of heavy ammunition boots inside the pack is retained. Now, if recent wars have taught us anything, they have proved the necessity of the extra supply of boots required by soldiers being carried by the regimental transport, and not on the soldiers' backs. One soldier being more valuable than many boots, it is undesirable to break him down carrying heavy boots, which he may never require. A soldier only needs a light pair of shoes or slippers to put on at the end of a march, to relieve his feet and allow of his drying his boots. These should be really light and carried in his pack, and they should be issued for campaigns free of cost and as extras. The new valise equipment is said to be very similar to the one proposed by Lieutenant-Colonel Bray, 4th King's Own Regiment, at Dover, in 1869. That officer then proposed to carry the great-coat inside the valise; but to reduce the weight, he proposed a coat of a better, lighter, and warmer material.

The French Military Estimates for 1884 are already before the public. They are set down at over £24,000,000, a very heavy sum, considering that service is obligatory, and that the above figures are far from representing what the nation has really to pay for the Army. The £24,000,000 shows an excess of nearly £1,000,000 over the estimates of last year, which were augmented by the expedition to Tunis. But for that expedition, the estimates of next year would exceed those of this year by only £16,000. The number of men to be provided for is set down at 518,642, together with 130,146 horses. It is complained that the amount of money spent in administration is out of all proportion to the Army properly so speaking, and that the number of officers who exchange the sword for the pen is constantly increasing. A French military critic remarks that "there are four regiments of Engineers in France, and that consequently there exist, in activity, four Colonels, four Lieutenant-Colonels, &c. But what is the cadre of the special Staff? Thirty-three Colonels, 33 Lieutenant-Colonels, &c., and all through the Army it is the same thing, until the military administration of France absorbs the best part of the Army. . . . . . The regiment to-day is a pis-aller. In 1879, General Trochu said that we might reduce the Staffs of our Army Corps and active divisions by 90 officers. What would he say to-day? We have 28,000 officers, 10,000 more than Germany, and this difference is almost entirely due to our Staffs and to our administration. These officers cost the State over £3,000,000."

The Volunteer year, which closes next Wednesday, has not been eventful for large displays, if that at Brighton be excepted, but it is evident to those who have watched the progress of the force, that in all parts of Great Britain steady and energetic efforts have been put forth to attain increased efficiency, not as gauged by the drill and shooting requirements of the Government, but in that much wider sense which is shown in officers submitting themselves for examination in tactics, by a larger attendance than has ever previously been noted at the various camps formed during the season, and by numerous ideas and suggestions emanating from the Volunteers themselves, to raise the character of the organisation, and, in the absence of further State aid, render it as complete as possible. Perhaps, after another quarter of a century has been added to the age of the force—providing no demands are made in the interim for their services—the Volunteers will be completely equipped and furnished with transport. On November 1 of last year, the enrolled strength of all arms was 207,336,—viz., Light Horse, 260; Artillery, 38,261; Engineers, 8,896; Mounted Rifles, 52; and Rifles, 159,867. Out of this enrolled strength, nearly 200,000 (the exact number was 199,374) were returned as efficient; 175,878 were present at inspection; and 17,621 officers and serjeants had earned the special grant for "proficiency," 328 of the former having passed in tactics. It is too early yet to gauge with any attempt at accuracy the numbers which will be shown in the Returns shortly due at the War Office; but as inspection-states have always been found to be an unfailing index of the state of the force, it may safely be foreshadowed that there will be a return of over 200,000 efficients, and in some other respects corresponding improvement.

Article 87 of the Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882, says:—"A Captain of Our Regular Forces shall be eligible to be transferred or posted for service in the Militia of Our United Kingdom; and while so serving in the Militia shall, for a period not exceeding ten years, be upon half-pay; which shall be in lieu of all retired pay or gratuity on retirement under this Warrant." A similar article appeared in a Royal Warrant for the first time a little more than ten years ago, and has been continued in successive Warrants since. Although it is not expressly so stated in the article, we were always under the impression that the last sentence of the above quotation precluded an officer so placed on half-pay from ever returning to full pay in the Regular Army. However, we observe in the Gazette of the 19th instant that an officer who had almost completed his ten years on half-pay, has been brought back to full pay in a Line regiment. This officer, judging from the length of time he has been in the Militia, must have been either the first or very nearly the first, who availed himself of the then new mode of proceeding to half-pay. And now that he has been restored to full pay just as his ten years had almost expired, it will be most interesting to other officers, whose ten years on half-pay may be drawing to a close, to ascertain, if possible, whether they also may look forward to once more joining a Line regiment on full pay; and, if not, it will probably be almost equally interesting to them to know why such a favour should be bestowed upon one particular officer, if it be not intended to treat in a similar manner all who are similarly situated.

A good example of the ever-varying treatment to which our unfortunate Army is continually being subjected is afforded by the fact that the following three foot-notes to Table 24 of the General Annual Return of the British Army for 1882 are necessary to the understanding of that table, which gives the number of re-engagements of men of the Regular Army between the years 1863 and 1882:—1. "By the Army Enlistment Act of 1867, men were permitted to re-engage after completing two-thirds of their first term of service; and by Royal Warrant of June 29, 1867, the soldier's pay was increased by twopence per diem, with a further penny a day on re-engagement." 2. "By the Army Enlistment Act of 1870, re-engagements were restricted to men in the last year of their first period of service; and by Royal Warrant, dated June 2, 1870, the extra pay of a penny a day on re-engagement was discontinued, and the scale of good-conduct pay revised. These restrictions do not apply to men enlisted under the Acts of 1847 and 1867. See Army Circular, 1872 (Clause 111)." 3. "By Royal Warrant of February 27, 1869, re-engagements after discharge were ordered to be discontinued. This restriction was withdrawn by Army Circular, 1875 (Clause 109), and again revived by Army Circular, 1877 (Clause 58)."

As an illustration of the state of discontent to which the junior officers of the Army have been reduced by War-Office legislation under the rule of Mr. Childers, a letter appeared in the Morning Post of the 22nd inst., by an officer, signed, "A Wasted Life," which showed plainly enough what the younger officers think of the foolish age rules, as applied to themselves. It is a very sad state of things, and General Thibaudin himself cannot have made such a complete mess of the French Army as has been made of our own. The French officers are reported to be most discontented. The cause which has led to this state of things in France is precisely the same as that which has led to the present lamentable state of the English Army. The Army was made a battle-horse in 1870 for the politicians to fight their civilian theories, "fads," and experiments upon; consequently, we have had the abolition of Purchase, short service, age and non-employment rules, incessant and interminable examinations on every subject, School-Board officers, linked battalions, destruction of esprit de corps, weak battalions, loss of historical regimental numbers, wholesale transfer of men from one battalion to another, compulsory removal of officers in the prime of life, &c., and a general dismemberment of the Army. Will it ever be put straight again?

While Major-General Burrows, in the disastrous action of Maiwand, clearly demonstrated his unfitness for the command of troops in the field, he showed remarkable personal intrepidity under circumstances calculated to try the resolution of the bravest. Soon after the confused and hopeless flight began, General Burrows was informed that an officer of Jacob's Rifles was badly wounded, and he was asked if he would "give him a mount." The General, without a moment's hesitation, replied, "Certainly," and, dismounting, not only assisted in lifting the wounded man into the saddle, but actually led the horse for some time. A second wounded officer was afterwards placed on the horse in front of the former, till a dooly was procured, in which he was laid, and in which he was mortally wounded. The officer who asked General Burrows to make so heavy a sacrifice at such a critical time died soon after. But for this, the unfortunate commander's disinterested resignation of his own safety, and, as seemed probable, of his life, would not have remained so long unnoticed. We are glad to be able to perform an act of tardy justice in laying before our readers the above particulars, which were furnished by the officer who owes General Burrows an obligation which he can never repay.

The members of the Artillery Commission, Lieutenant-Colonel Abbot, Captain Matthews, and Lieutenant Jakes, appointed by the United States Government to report upon the armaments of Europe, paid a visit recently to Cronstadt, accompanied by officers placed at their disposition by the Russian authorities. The commission inspected the two most powerful forts of the island series, Forts Constantine and Miliutin, the frigate Peter the Great, the newly completed man-of-war Vladimir Monomarchus, and the dockyard at Cronstadt.

Lieutenants Masterman and Domville also took part in the proceedings, and a very pleasant evening was brought to a close with the National Anthem.

The Sappho was at Esquimault, and would accompany flagship on Oct. 9. The Kingfisher was on the coast of Chili. Letters for the Swiftsure posted after Oct. 12 should be addressed to the care of the British Consul at Panama. On Sept. 19 a ball was given by the officers of the Fleet and Naval establishment to the inhabitants of Victoria. The large building known as the sail-loft, in the dockyard, was set apart for the purpose, and the decorations were most elaborate and striking, all the available flags, cutlasses, bayonets, pistols, dirks, and swords being requisitioned so as to make a thoroughly attractive display. Each ship furnished its own contributions towards this object, but those of the Heroine exceeded all the others for beauty and elegance of design. Guests began to arrive shortly after 8 o'clock, and by 9 o'clock nearly 400 ladies and gentlemen had assembled, amongst them being the members of the Executive Government and the Judiciary, the Mayor, and other notables. The fearful injuries inflicted on Lieut. Lees, and through which he lost his life, are thus described by the Washington Army and Navy Register:—"Lieut. Lees was found in Mears Street, desperately wounded in the face, his eye apparently gone, the nose and upper part of the face fractured, and the upper jaw so broken that it fell over the lower jaw. Dr. Moore, staff surgeon, had Lieut. Lees sent to St. Joseph's Hospital. When asked the cause of the accident, he faintly articulated 'horse.' Lees had assisted in the decoration of St. Paul's Church, Esquimault, and afterwards drove to town in a two-wheeled buggy and dined at the club. He drove from the club and reached Mears Street. It was a dark, foggy night, and it is supposed the trap upset in turning the corner. It was found in a deep ditch, reduced to splinters. The horse was badly cut, the left flank detached from the shafts, and was calmly surveying the wreck. Beneath the horse's feet were two of Lieut. Lees' teeth, and his hat. When first discovered the poor fellow was holding his detached face in his hands."

They landed at the dockyard, and inspected the vessels in course of construction, the stores, &c. They were conducted over the yard by Capt. Chatfield, the captain-superintendent, and by the chief constructor, Mr. J. C. Froyne.

The Naval correspondent of the Hampshire Telegraph makes this week the following appropriate strictures on the Naval administration of the Admiralty:—"As an example of entire inconsistency, commend me to the following Admiralty decisions: In the early part of last year, when an officer did assume the temporary command of a tender belonging to the Excellent, and had a collision through the bad steering of the vessel, he was reprimanded by their Lordships for his direct disobedience of Art. 145, cap. 3, sec. 1, of the Instructions, in presuming to take 'any rank or command' upon himself. Hardly three months later another officer, on receiving orders which placed him between the Scylla of ships' orders and the Charybdis of the Admiralty Instructions, dared to point out that he stood in imminent danger of being wrecked on either, and for this glaring indiscretion was promptly placed on half-pay, presumably for asking unpleasant questions, for, as far as I have heard, no other reason was adduced or even hinted at. It is pretty well known that 'every person is fully authorised individually to make known to his superior any just cause of complaint' (Art. 636), but events have proved that any such legitimate step is immediately noted in that mysterious black-book at the Admiralty, which has blasted so many promising careers, and however flagrant the injustice may afterwards be proved, the 'recording angel' at Whitehall forgets to drop the tear, 'blotting out for ever' the damning remark —'this is an officious person.'"

The Rupert went out of Portsmouth Harbour on Monday morning, in charge of Capt. Colomb, superintendent of the Steam Reserve, for steam and torpedo trials.

The Duke of Wellington and the Victory struck lower yards and topmasts on Monday for the winter months.

Portland, Thursday, October 18, 1883.

We left Berehaven on Wednesday afternoon, the 10th, and after a fine passage round, arrived here a little after noon on Saturday. There was a good deal of fog and mist hanging about the Bay when we started, but it cleared off when we got outside. In the evening, we had spar drill, and later on went to "night quarters." On Thursday, the Squadron exercised at steam tactics, going through the evolutions which are to be performed when we go out to meet the Lords of the Admiralty. The next day, the columns opened out to two miles distance apart to enable some of the ships that had a few rounds of their quarterly ammunition unexpended to fire them away; the Admiral went on board the Sultan in the forenoon and completed his inspection of her.

On Saturday morning, the troopship Assistance passed us on her way up Channel. A little before noon we neared the anchorage, steaming in our usual formation of columns of divisions line ahead, the 1st division being to port. When off the eastern end of the breakwater, the line was inverted from van to rear, and their course altered eight points together, bringing the Squadron into columns of divisions line abreast, the 1st division leading, and the Admiral's nearest to the breakwater. In this order we stood on till the anchorage was reached, when we came to simultaneously and moored. On Monday we had our usual drill in the forenoon, and in the afternoon the field-guns were landed for exercise. In the evening it came on to blow, and it has been blowing a gale ever since, the wind being from W.S.W. to W.N.W. The small-arm battalions were to have landed, but owing to the heavy weather they have been unable to. We have not been able to carry out our customary morning and evening evolutions, as the top-gallant masts have been kept down since Monday. Yesterday morning we rove top tackles and jears, and in the evening let go our sheet-anchors; we weighed them again this morning, as the wind had gone down a little. It is quite uncertain how much of the proposed programme for to-morrow will be carried out.

The residents of Weymouth and the neighbourhood have very kindly been entertaining us at a ball. It was held on Tuesday evening at the Assembly Rooms of the Royal Hotel, and was a great success. The ball-room, which is a fine large one, with an excellent floor, was very prettily decorated. Admiral Dowell and a large number of the officers attended, and spent a most enjoyable evening, or rather night, as it was half-past three before "The Queen" was played. It was not all joy, either going on shore or coming off, and those who had to return to their ships envied the lucky few who were able to stay on shore for the night. However, most of us are accustomed to pleasuring under difficulties.

Another correspondent with the Squadron writes as follows:—The Channel Squadron unmoored and prepared for sea on the evening of Thursday, Oct. 18. The weather looked anything but promising, and it was doubtful up to the last moment before we weighed on the following morning whether the Lords of the Admiralty would be able to come round from Portsmouth in the Enchantress, or whether they would prefer the more comfortable journey by train. However, a telegram announcing their departure in the Enchantress caused the signal to be made to weigh at once, and so we started in anything but nice weather. Wind and rain and a nasty sea awaited us outside, and having steamed out some way, we altered course and stood slowly back towards Portland. About noon the Enchantress overtook us, and as the weather was too bad to admit of the programme of steam tactics being carried out, she steamed right on into Portland. The Fleet followed, and came to at single anchor later on. The two Admirals of the Squadron lunched with their Lordships on board the Enchantress, and directly afterwards the Admiralty party split up into two, and embarking in steam pinnaces flying the Admiralty flag they proceeded to inspect the various ships composing the Squadron. It was past 5 when their Lordships left the last ship, and after the labours of the day they gave an official dinner-party, to which all the captains of the Fleet and the two Admirals were invited. On Saturday last, all the landing parties and Marines from every ship in the Squadron were landed and reviewed, under the command of Capt. Fellowes, of the Minotaur. They presented a fine appearance, and marched past in a very creditable manner. Col. French was in charge of the Marines, who, in these days of short service in the Line, always look a corps d'élite. The Marine Artillery well upheld their reputation of being the finest corps in the service. After the inspection the battalion leaders and company officers were called to the front, and Lord Northbrook expressed the approval of the Board of Admiralty at the manner in which all ranks had acquitted themselves. In the afternoon, their Lordships visited the two flagships of the Squadron, and in the evening the commanders of the different ships had the honour of dining on board the Enchantress. Having finished their programme at Portland, the Lords of the Admiralty left in their yacht for Devonport early last Sunday morning. That their Lordships were well pleased with what they saw is shown by the following general signal made by Sir William Dowell, commanding the Channel Squadron:—"The Vice-Admiral wishes to congratulate the officers, seamen, and Marines of the Squadron on the success of the Admiralty inspection, their Lordships having expressed their great satisfaction at the order and cleanliness of the ships, and the thorough knowledge shown by both officers and men of their various duties." On Saturday night an amateur naval dramatic entertainment was given by the officers of H.M.S. Minotaur, at the Theatre Royal, Weymouth, for the benefit of the funds of the Royal Eye Infirmary. The two operettas of "The Blind Beggar" and "Cox and Box," and the farce "In Possession," were the pieces played.

London Amusements.

The Covent Garden Promenade Concerts continue to be well attended. On Monday next will be given a special concert. The vocalists will include Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley, Madame Sherrington, and Miss Damian.

The St. James's Theatre is now furnished with a new four-act comedy called "Young Folks' Ways," as slight in structure as a piece of painted porcelain, and requiring to be as delicately handled. The play, written by Mrs. Burnett and Mr. W. H. Gillett, has been already produced in New York under the title of "Esmeralda," the name of a novelette by the authoress rapidly gaining popularity in America. On the stage the plot seems to have less substance than in the story, but the audience find in the cleverness of the acting some compensation for the lack of exciting incidents. The curtain rises on a log hut in North Carolina, owned by a rugged farmer named Old Rogers, and occupied by his pretty daughter Esmeralda and his domineering wife. These characters are most effectively impersonated by Mr. Hare, Miss Webster (a débutante, and grand-daughter of the late veteran actor), and Mrs. Hermann Vezin. When the fortunes of the family improve by the result of a mining speculation, and the story shifts to Paris, Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, as two friends of the old farmer, enliven the serious interest of the play by some of those passages of light comedy in which they excel. How Esmeralda escapes from a marriage with a marquis, arranged by her ambitious mother, to wed her early lover, a sturdy backwoodsman, is afterwards illustrated with some needless elaboration. Mr. Alexander, Mr. Maclean, and Miss Linda Dietz find places in the cast, and the scenery and stage appointments exhibit that careful attention to minute details so characteristic of the present management.

At a morning performance at the Strand, an encouraging reception was given to Mr. Edward Righton's comic drama of "Hard Up," produced in the provinces about three years since. When the piece, however, is placed in the regular programme, the third act will require to be strengthened and much of the farcical dialogue eliminated. Mr. Righton represented the principal character, an uneducated pawnbroker, anxious to give his daughter advantages he does not possess himself; and he was fortunate in having excellent support from Miss Mary Rorke, Miss Lydia Cowell, Mr. George Barrett, Mr. Hawtrey, and Mr. E. W. Garden.

At the Surrey has been produced an elaborate melodrama, in six acts, called "The Crimes of Paris," and the playwrights, Messrs. Paul Meritt and George Conquest, have manifestly suited the requirements of their audience by crowding into four hours as much excitement as possible. Scenes of Parisian life and views of well-known localities in the French capital are picturesquely portrayed, and the action is unflaggingly sustained through the close pursuit and successive escapes of an atrocious villain who is hunted down at last. The prominent parts are played by Mr. T. F. Nye as the wicked viscount, and by Mr. Julian Cross as the persevering detective.

At Toole's Theatre, the late T. W. Robertson's comedy of "Ours" has been revived, with a new cast, including Miss Amy Roselle, Miss Fanny Addison, Miss Cora Stuart, and Messrs. T. W. Robertson, J. F. Young, A. Beaumont, E. D. Ward, and A. Chevalier. Comparisons are almost inevitable, but it is pleasant to record that the general result of the performance was highly creditable to those engaged in the representation.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment at St. George's Hall is now refreshed by a new musical sketch, entitled "On the Thames," given by Mr. Corney Grain with his usual cleverness, and amusingly illustrating the inconveniences of a rustic cottage on the upper reaches of the river, when chosen as a holiday resort. A new second part, called "A Water Cure," has also been provided, agreeably employing the talents of Miss Fanny Holland, Miss Marion Wardroper, Mr. North Home, and Mr. Alfred Reed. The diverting trifle, written by Arnold Felix, is embellished with some pleasing music, composed by Mr. George Gear.

With this week the play of "Ingomar" is withdrawn from the Lyceum, and Miss Mary Anderson now appears as Pauline in the "Lady of Lyons," with Mr. J. H. Barnes as Claude, Mr. William Farren as Colonel Damas, Mrs. Arthur Stirling as Madame Deschappelles, and Mrs. Billington as the Widow Melnotte.

Mr. Charles Collette, the popular comedian, will make his reappearance at a special matinée on Thursday next at the Gaiety Theatre, when he will appear as Adonis Evergreen in "My Awful Dad." The reputation which Mr. Collette has earned throughout the country in this and other parts created by the late Charles Mathews, will doubtless be recognised by the patrons of the Gaiety Theatre, where Mr. Collette was a few years ago a great favourite.

Reviews.

Hand-book of the Panjab. (John Murray.)—The publication of this volume completes the "Hand-books of India." It is difficult to estimate even approximately the vast amount of labour required by so extensive a work. Its primary object is to guide the traveller to and through a part of Rajputana and those northern provinces of India which are directly or indirectly ruled by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Panjab. They cover an area several thousand miles greater than that of Germany, while no territory in the world of equal extent possesses so great a variety of scenery, beginning from the vast plains round Dehli, bordering the five rivers, and ending with the towering heights of the abode of snow, where the Nanga Parvat, one of the highest mountains known to man, rises to an altitude of over 26,629 ft.,—considerably more than double the height of Mont Blanc. It would be almost presumptuous to endeavour to describe even a tithe of the valuable information contained in this volume. By the traveller or the student it will be found invaluable.

It has been decided by Gen. Sir D. Stewart, G.C.B., Commander-in-Chief in India, with the approval of the Indian Government, to take immediate steps in the direction of a reorganisation of the uniform of the Indian native regiments. A committee, consisting of four officers—one president, two members, and a secretary—has been directed to assemble at Meean Meer, to report upon a plan for the revision of the dress regulations of the Bengal Cavalry. The new regulations for the uniform of the Bombay cavalry regiment has just been issued. The light blue and silver is to be replaced by dark green and gold, with red Kummerbund; helmets are to be worn, but for regimental parades the yare is to be covered with the native officer's loongee. The chief aim of the new regulations is to obtain a more uniform appearance of the various regiments, and to lessen the expense of officers in their outfit. It is also claimed for the new regulations that the appearance of the regiments will be more soldierly, while the uniform will be better fitted for active service.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, &c.

Red Lancer.—We regret that we are unable to give our correspondent the information he asks for regarding the retention of scarlet uniform by the 16th Lancers, when other Light Cavalry regiments were changed to blue. It would be difficult now to trace the causes of many of the successive changes in the colour of the uniforms and facings of regiments. Many of these changes are probably due to the caprice of the Adjutant-General of the time.

Falcon.—The Glatton trial took place at Portland on the morning of July 5, 1872, at half-past 10. The Glatton was moored head and stern, and so was the Hotspur. The three unwilling occupants of the turret suffered no injury. Steam was up all the time, for the turret machinery, the turret being revolved after each shot by the engineers of the ship. The shots were fired at a range of 200 yards. The Glatton's guns were fired over the breakwater to seaward after the experiment, to prove that their mountings, &c., were uninjured.

Obituary.

Com. Herbert Dolphin, R.N., inspecting officer of Coastguard for the Northern District, died last week, after a long illness. The deceased officer was buried on Saturday last with military honours. The firing-party was furnished by the depôt of the Durham Light Infantry. A party of Blue-jackets belonging to the Coastguard drew the carriage, the pall-bearers being the commander, fleet surgeon, and paymaster of the Durham, drill-ship, and Major Sweny, R.M. Then followed the chief mourners. The Right Hon. W. E. Baxter, M.P., the deceased officer's father-in-law, with his brothers, and brothers-in-law, Blue-jackets of the drill-ship and Coastguard, together with the volunteers of the life-saving apparatus, closing the procession. Much sympathy was displayed, Com. Dolphin being greatly beloved both in the service and in private life. He entered the Navy shortly before the Crimean war and served in the Baltic during 1854-5 (medal), was promoted to commander Feb. 6, 1872, and served in that rank on board H.M.S. Defence and Sultan. He commanded the Unicorn, drill-ship for the Reserve at Dundee, for about three years, and received an appointment in the Coastguard at Inverness, from which he was transferred to Sunderland in June last.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE.

From SYMES and Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Medical Hall, Simla, January 5, 1881.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, Esq.,
33 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.
Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,
BRONCHITIS,
EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA, and is the true Palliative in
NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
GREAT SPECIFIC for
DIARRHŒA,
CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.
The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor,

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE.

OROIDE GOLD JEWELLERY (REGD.)

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
Accurate timekeepers, 21s to 50s, safe and free per post (registered).
The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose."

OROIDE GOLD SCARF PINS, 2s 6d to 5s, post free.

THE PARCELS POST.—THE PARCELS POST AND TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DELIVERY of TEA.

THE PARCELS POST and the DISTRIBUTION of TEA to every place where there is a Post-Office in the United Kingdom.

THE PARCELS POST.—TEA of the highest excellence (as supplied to Dukes, Earls, Barons, and the County Families of England), sent free by Parcels Post in quantities of 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb., to any postal address in the United Kingdom, on receipt of a remittance for the price of the Tea and 3d.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any address free, by post, on receipt of 8s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Half-Crown Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea can be sent free of post on receipt of 15s 3d.

THE POSTAL LIMIT of 7 lb. will only really cover 6 lb. of Tea, as the weight of paper and twine has to be deducted, so that COOPER COOPER and CO. will send 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea free of post for 18s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-and-Sixpenny Tea free of post for 15s 3d, or 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea free of post for 12s 3d.

PACKAGES containing 20 lb., 60 lb., or 100 lb. of TEA will be sent to any railway station in England absolutely free of carriage on receipt of remittance for the value of the tea.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of TEA will be delivered free of charge at your own houses by the postman, for 3d in addition to the cost of the tea.

THUS 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be delivered free at your own house for a remittance of 8s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be delivered free at your own door for a Post-Office Order for 10s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Two-Shilling Tea will be sent free to your own homes for a cheque for 12s 3d.

THE PARCELS POST.—4 lb., 5 lb., or 6 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA despatched to any part of England, Wales, Scotland, or Ireland, by post for 3d in addition to the price of the Tea.

THUS 4 lb. of THREE-SHILLING TEA can be sent to the remotest address on receipt of remittance for 12s 3d. Thus 5 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be forwarded to any place where letters are delivered, postage paid, for 15s 3d. Thus 6 lb. of Three-Shilling Tea will be sent to any address in any postal district in these islands for 18s 3d.

TEAS of all descriptions on COOPER COOPER and CO.'S LIST, posted in parcels containing 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. each by parcels post to any part of England, Wales, Ireland, or Scotland, in exchange for cash (in registered envelope). Post-Office Orders, cheques, postal orders, or stamps for the value of the tea, and 3d extra.

FOR example, a Package containing 4 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be sent to any place in the United Kingdom in exchange for 8s 3d in cash, enclosed in a registered envelope, and addressed to any of COOPER COOPER and CO.'S establishments in London.

OR, a Parcel containing 6 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA can be delivered by parcels post, carriage free, by remitting a Post-Office Order for 12s 3d.

OR, 5 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA will be despatched, free of post, for a postal order for 10s, and three penny postage stamps.

THUS, in the same manner, THREE-SHILLING TEA in parcels to the value of 12s 3d, 15s 3d, and 18s 3d each, containing respectively 4 lb., 5 lb., and 6 lb. of tea, will be sent on receipt of postal orders, cheques, or cash for the several amounts.

CO-OPERATION. — COOPER COOPER and CO. also invite attention to the new System of Co-operation in the purchase of Tea by persons living in the country through the medium of the Parcels Post.

CO-OPERATION.—Thus, as COOPER COOPER and CO. are enabled to send packages containing 6 lb. of any of the Choice TEAS on their List to any place in the United Kingdom for 3d, it follows that if six families in a village are willing to club together, each can have a pound of tea sent for one halfpenny.

CO-OPERATION.—Or, as two parcels containing 6 lb. each can be sent for 6d, six families would be enabled, by joining together in one remittance, to order 2 lb. of TWO-SHILLING TEA each, at a cost of one penny only, in addition to the price of the tea.

CO-OPERATION.—This system will apply to every kind of TEA offered for Sale by COOPER COOPER and CO., and if followed out will practically enable them to place before customers in every county town and village in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, in the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, in the Hebrides, and the Orkneys, Tea of the same choice kinds as sold in their various Establishments in London, at the same prices, with the addition of the nominal sum of one halfpenny a pound.

TO the few who still doubt the failure of the unmixed short-service system, of the double-battalion system, and of the territorial system, we would recommend the perusal of the Annual Report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting for the year 1882. From this carefully composed, but by no means happily expressed document, we learn that "The complete amalgamation between the infantry battalions of the line and those of the militia, which was effected in 1881, was followed last year by the amalgamation of the militia artillery with the Royal Artillery." There is, therefore, no longer any distinction between two branches of our military forces which still differ radically in their mode of living, duties, and conditions of service; or else the word amalgamation has some peculiar meaning not to be found in dictionaries, and unknown beyond the magic circle of army reformers! If the word confusion were substituted for amalgamation, in the above quotation, the sense would be quite clear, and would be almost unanimously accepted. We have called this Report a carefully composed document, but the expression must be qualified. Great care is shown in the omission of many important but inconvenient items of information, and in the surrounding of others with a maze of figures in which they may easily escape notice. But the carefulness extends no farther, for the Report is neither clear nor accurate; it is neither ingenuous nor ingenious. We are told that in 37 regimental districts (out of 79) 50 per cent. of the recruits who enlisted joined their respective territorial regiments; while in some others "it does not appear likely for some little time that the supply will be equal to the normal requirements of their territorial regiments, and though it is hoped," &c. We leave the obvious correction of the collocation in this quotation to our readers. Among those districts which are not yet thoroughly vaccinated with the territorial lymph, we find the 34th with only 18 per cent., the 44th 15 per cent., the 79th 10 per cent., and the 32nd only 8 per cent. of their recruits drawn from their own districts. Of 7,812 who volunteered from the Militia for the Regular Army, only 3,725 volunteered for their perfectly amalgamated "line battalions." The Foot Guards, Royal Artillery, and Royal Engineers, "still fall considerably short of the numbers which will ultimately [whatever that may mean] be required." Various devices are detailed for inducing men to join these special corps, among which we may mention (though the Report does not) that the standard for the Foot Guards is now as low as 5 ft. 8 in. in the Grenadiers, and 5 ft. 7 in. in the other two regiments. "Many men (?) are sent away who exhibit all the promise of becoming efficient soldiers." In other, and plainer, truer words, many lads who offered to enlist, and were rejected as being too immature, would in time become physically fit for the service. Of course they would, and so will in time a large proportion of the little boys now at school or playing truant; but neither immature lads nor school-boys are fit material to fill the ranks of an army that ought to be fit for service, but is not. The Egyptian campaign was "abnormal," and so was the number of men whose terms of service expired in 1882. Everything, indeed, is called abnormal that tests the success of any part of those reforms that have spoiled the Army, in order to give us 27,924 reserve men who are useless in peace and cease to be reserves in war. Several elaborate tables are appended to the Report. Appendix A shows a falling-off of 1,240 in the number of recruits raised in 1882, as compared with the previous year. B gives details of enlistments by districts. C is headed "Ages, Heights, and Weights of Recruits inspected during 1880, 1881, and 1882," but the columns are headed 1879, 1880, and 1881. Either the headings of the appendix, or those of the several columns must be wrong; possibly both are incorrect. D is apparently two returns "amalgamated." E shows the number of discharges by purchase, from 1874. F purports to show the "Increase and Decrease of the Army" during the year 1882. To ordinary minds it seems impossible that the Army can have both increased and decreased at the same time; but the mystery is solved in the simplest way, for there is an apparent increase of 3,776, but an actual diminution of 7,064. The fallacious "net increase" is produced by including 10,840 men taken from the Reserve, and 889 men from "other causes, principally interchanges between the different branches of the Service." How any increase can have been effected by these interchanges is utterly incomprehensible. A man might as well increase the money he carried about him by shifting some of it from one pocket to another. In G, we discover a diminution in the Militia of 6,899. Lastly, H is a maze of figures about the drilling of Militia recruits, into which we decline to enter. The concluding paragraph of the Report is so very amusing that we must give it verbatim:—"It will be of incalculable benefit in a recruiting point of view when the staff of the district, from the colonel downwards, can be furnished by the regiment which belongs to the locality. It is by this means that that esprit de corps, which the English army is so proud, and so justly proud of, will be continually maintained and handed down, not only in the regiment itself but in the district to which it belongs, and from which its supplies of men ought to be furnished." The translation of the above passage into correct English would be a useful item for the next competitive examination. The concluding sentence of the quotation, penned by an advocate of the amalgamations which have done more to destroy esprit de corps than any other changes ever made in the British Army, penned seriously, and not as a grim joke, is clear evidence of extraordinary mental obliquity.

IN reviewing last year the progress of Naval gunnery, in so far as it was indicated by the abstract of prize-firing carried out in the year 1881, we had occasion to remark on the very great falling-off in the "figure of merit" as compared with that of the preceding year, viz., from 54·25 in 1880 to 31·26 in 1881. We then pointed out that this decadence was in all probability due to the fact that the new regulations for prize-firing, as set forth in the "Gunnery Manual" of 1880, had then for the first time come into force, and we endeavoured to indicate such points in the new system as appeared likely to conduce to a result which, qualified as it undoubtedly might be by a certain amount of novelty and other circumstances, would assuredly prove unsatisfactory and discouraging in the extreme, unless the succeeding report should to some extent, counterbalance it. That this would be the case was, however, scarcely to be expected, seeing that the regulations in the "Gunnery Manual," though nominally in force from January 1, 1881, could not have been received, in some instances, until the prize-firing for that year had been already carried out, so that the abstract of last year would only partially indicate the working of the system. The report which has just been issued, giving the results of last year's practice, is therefore the first which has shown the plan in full operation; and it must be acknowledged that those who predicted evil concerning it have proved to be no false prophets. The "figure of merit," so far from showing any symptoms of recovery, has sunk to the unprecedentedly low figure of 18·7; while no fewer than thirteen out of the fifty-two competing vessels show a minus quantity in the final column. This result—remembering that 96 is the highest possible score for each gun—is simply absurd, and sufficient in itself to condemn the whole system; unless, indeed, we are to draw the very illogical inference, that the more the men are instructed and practised, the worse they ought to shoot. Looking more closely into the two last columns, it cannot but be remarked that the deductions for excess over the standard times are disproportionately large, and applied, apparently, on some system which is totally at variance with that laid down in the "Gunnery Manual," and which certainly gives most extraordinary results. To give an instance, let us take two vessels, —the Briton and Encounter, each carrying eight 64-pounders:—

Briton	7 42	45·6	16·8	28·8
Encounter...	7 50	51·5	46·83	4·67

We cannot pretend to explain such incongruities as these, and we only hope that there is somebody who can, as the report abounds with them; nor is it quite clear by what authority the instructions contained in the "Gunnery Manual," page 437, have been totally ignored, seeing that they have not been cancelled or amended by any subsequent circular. The figures given above will prove a disagreeable surprise for those on board the Encounter, which should, by the only recognised authority, have appeared above the Briton in order of merit, instead of some fifteen places below her; and there are equally unpleasant discoveries in store for about half the vessels whose names appear on the abstract, one with average time, four seconds inside the allowance, having—mirabile dictu—no fewer than 66 deducted from her average points! The abnormally low "figure of merit" of the Fleet would thus appear to be in great measure due to this new freak—for so it cannot but be regarded by the uninitiated—with reference to the time deductions; but something must also be attributed to the very unpractical method prescribed for the actual performance of the practice, by which a gun's crew, having, perhaps, got through some five or six rounds successfully, is suddenly and purposely launched into a game of "hide and seek" with the target for some three or four minutes. As long as the small target is retained, and points are awarded, according to the proximity of the shots—a direct hit being almost impossible—it is unreasonable to expect that a gun's crew will fire a given number of rounds, against time, with any degree of precision, while the ship describes a rectangular figure round the object. Among the various squadrons, the Channel takes the lead, and the Mediterranean, with a wretched average of 4·85, comes last; an unusual occurrence, which may be partly accounted for by the fact that every ship on that station, with one unimportant exception, carried out prize-firing towards the close of the year, when the operations in Egypt had probably occasioned considerable changes in the crews, through invaliding, and other causes. The Phœnix, which occupies the place of honour, did very creditably, but she no longer exists, having been lost off Newfoundland, and the same may be said of a few others. The performances of the remainder are chiefly interesting in so far as they assist to demonstrate the absurdity of a system which, as a test of efficiency, is, we venture to assert, absolutely valueless. It is satisfactory to learn that this fact is being gradually brought home to the minds of the authorities, and that efforts are being made to establish a system in which the results will depend upon something more definite than a mere estimate of the greater or less delinquencies of erring projectiles which never hit the mark. There are, of course, difficulties to be overcome, and opposition—though of an unreasoning kind—to be encountered, before a regular "hit-or-miss" system can be introduced for target practice at sea. But we wish the promoters of the scheme every success, and beg to remind them—in words with which all gunnery officers will be familiar—that, "No difficulty baffles great zeal." It is a pleasure to turn to the other side of the sheet, on which are recorded the far more satisfactory results of the rifle competition. It is evident that the regulations contained in last year's circular have borne fruits which, as we pointed out at the time, they could not fail to do if faithfully carried out. The "figure of merit" for small-arms has consequently risen from 83·01 to 92·43, while eighteen competing vessels have averaged over 100 points up to 400 yards, the Helicon (linked with Coquette) heading the list with 113·3. The Mediterranean Squadron takes the lead altogether, as might reasonably be expected, seeing that this is the only station on which there is a Naval range, under the entire charge and supervision of a competent musketry officer, who conducts the whole course, the men from each vessel being in turn placed entirely under his control during their occupation of the range, and being thus removed from those disturbing influences which are too often fatal to the efficient performance of the musketry course in a seagoing ship. In what these obstructions consist, and how far they are avoidable, we were at some pains to point out last year, and it is unnecessary to recapitulate them, more especially as they are tolerably well known to those whom they most nearly concern. We feel bound, however, to insist upon one point which we then referred to, and with regard to which much still remains to be done. No amount of regulations, however good in themselves, will avail, unless the necessary facilities are provided for carrying them out. Referring again to the abstract, we find that thirty-nine out of seventy competing ships have not got beyond the 400 yards' range. Now, this represents a total of very nearly 3,000 men actually competing, and out of this number it is reasonable to suppose that 500—or about one-sixth—exceeded the 100 points at the first four ranges, and were, therefore, entitled to fire at 500 and 600 yards, with the chance of being distinguished as "marksmen." This, it appears, they have been unable to accomplish; and why? Partly because the number of rifle ranges available on most stations is totally inadequate to the requirements of the Navy, even under the former regulations; and partly, also, because the importance of carrying out the course in a thorough and efficient manner is not sufficiently insisted upon. Let every ship carry a certain proportion of service targets, according to her complement, with marking apparatus and steel mantlets complete; and let it be clearly understood that the course which is unavoidably interrupted shall be resumed at the next opportunity, and that nothing shall be permitted to interfere with its final consummation; and we venture to predict that there will soon be a further increase in the figure of merit, and a very fair sprinkling of "marksmen" in the fleet. It would not, perhaps, be worth while to establish a regular Naval range, with a gunnery officer permanently in charge, at any station except Malta; but the principle might be adopted, and its advantages practically obtained, by assembling the vessels of each squadron, by turns, at a convenient spot, and making one Gunnery Lieutenant Musketry Instructor pro tem. Something of this kind was done, we believe, at Besika Bay, and with good results. While, therefore, we cannot but contemplate with satisfaction the decided progress which has been made as regards musketry, we nevertheless feel bound to commend to the authorities for further consideration the very trite saying—"What is worth doing, is worth doing well."

The Admiralty have received a telegram, dated October 31, from the Senior Naval officer at Zanzibar, stating that a French war-ship arrived from Tamatave reports that H.M.S. Undine was there five days previously.

Last Thursday week the Lords of the Admiralty completed their inspection at Portsmouth by a visit to Eastney. After inspecting the brigade of Marine Artillery, under Colonel-Commandant Bridges, and barracks, the men went through gun-drill at the old muzzle-loaders, the new 6-in. breech-loader, and Nordenfelt machine-gun; and also with the new service-pattern 6-in. breech-loader, on the "improved French system," intended to form the armament of the Canada class of corvettes, and the 15-centimètre Krupp gun abandoned by the Egyptians at Kafr-el-Dowar. There is only a difference of three-tenths of an inch in the bores of these two guns, the English gun being the heaviest. A gunboat was moored in front of the range, to take the exact range and to notice the first graze of the projectiles. With 14-lb. charges, at 15 degrees of elevation, the Krupp gun gave 6,200 yards; with 20 degrees, 8,500 yards. The Admiralty 6-in. gun, with 35-lb. charges, only secured a range of 6,000 yards. The difference between these results is so striking, that comment would be superfluous. Experiments were also carried out at Dartford with a Nordenfelt 1½-in. shell gun. The trials proved that a projectile can penetrate a greater aggregate thickness of iron or steel plates, with intervals between them, than when the same thickness results from one or two plates. The 1½-in. shell-gun penetrated one 1-in., one ¾-in., and two ½-in. plates of steel.

Officers of the watch who have not had much experience in ships under sail will find a small pocket-book entitled, "The Officer of the Watch," published by Messrs. Griffin and Co., a most valuable aid in watch evolutions under sail. Mates of the forecastle and midshipmen will find this little work most useful. We wonder why the Lieutenant who compiled it has abstained from publishing his name?

The remarks on the Navy by Sir Henry James at Dumfries on Monday last will have been read with deep interest by the country. Sir Henry stated:—"There had been from Mr. Gibson and his colleagues a demand for more armour-plated ships. This had been complied with, and the increased charges have been met by strict economy in every department of the service." We hope this is correct, and it will be interesting to know the number of new ships that are to be laid down, and their proposed size and armament.

The Admiralty might do worse than take a leaf out of the German book. At Kiel and Wilhelmshafen everything for the immediate equipment and commission of every ship in the German Navy is stored and numbered and kept in the best order, so that a Captain may be able to put to sea with his ship completely rigged, armed, manned, and provisioned, three or four days after hoisting his pendant. We can imagine the confusion at our Dockyards that would take place at the outbreak of a Naval war.

It is difficult to realise how matters can be said to be moving quickly at the Admiralty, as Lord Northbrook recently stated at Winchester, when the Bellerophon, provision for which as a sea-going gunnery, armour-plated ship has been made in the Navy Estimates for two years, still remains dismantled at Devonport, with no immediate prospect of going to sea.

Although the French Government have ordered Lieutenant Viaud home, no serious attempt has been made to disprove the atrocities which he described in the Figaro as having been committed at Hué. It is hard to believe that any sailors, Christian or not, could have behaved as Pierre Loti id est, Lieutenant Viaud, says that the French sailors did, shooting down poor wretches who offered no resistance, waiting until those who had jumped into the water rose to the surface in order to pot them, and beating out the brains of the wounded. On all these horrors the writer dwells with remarkable gusto, and it is really melancholy to find French papers unable to comprehend why the Minister of Marine should punish so promising a young officer as Lieutenant Viaud. It is naturally asserted that the English committed as great atrocities in Egypt, and that had the Annamites beaten the French, they would have behaved as the French behaved to the Annamites. It is to be remarked that in the Hué, as in the Madagascar affair, the French loss appears to have been nil. It is really to be hoped, for the sake of humanity, that Pierre Loti, who is a dramatist and novelist, has been romancing. However, it is lamentable to find people in Paris coming forward publicly to protest against his recall, and approving of acts which may or may not be due to an over-vivid imagination, unfettered by any sense of morality. It appears extraordinary to us that any Editor should have been so dead to all feeling of patriotic shame as to publish the letters of M. Pierre Loti, that he should appear unaware that in publishing them he was casting a stigma on the French uniform.

Lieutenant Henry Hill, who commanded the Cockchafer on the China station up to last June, was tried by court-martial, and dismissed his ship, losing some five years' seniority, for being drunk on board his gunboat. In Naval circles, the sentence is considered to have been severe; but as we have received no details concerning the case, it is impossible for us to express an opinion on the subject, beyond saying that we consider no punishment too severe, when the charge of drunkenness is proved against an officer.

The Admiralty are seriously considering the advisability of substituting modern mastless ironclads for the obsolete ships which now compose the Channel Squadron, and of turning the latter into troopships. No doubt, this step will some day be taken, but the question is—when?

The Russian Admiralty having taken over the vessels of the Moscow Cruiser Fleet, have decided that for the future they shall not be repaired and refitted at Marseilles as hitherto, but at the establishment of the State-aided Black Sea Steam Navigation Company at Sebastopol, the works of which are to be considerably enlarged. It has been further decided that the cruisers shall no longer be used for commercial purposes, but as troopships, to convey troops and stores to and from the Caucasus, between Odessa and Batoum. The cruiser St. Petersburg has already commenced operations in this respect. Until Christmas she will be employed in bringing home time-expired men from Batoum, and afterwards transport thither recruits to fill their places.

The Vladivostock, a newspaper recently started at Vladivostock under semi-official auspices, publishes an article on the condition of the Amoor region, in which it declares that the defences of the country will never be secure until Russia maintains a larger permanent fleet in Pacific waters. Vladivostock, it says, possesses now a fine dock, a well-equipped dockyard, and abundance of stores, but ships and men are lacking. As a rule, it affirms that Russia only sends her "tubs" to the far East in ordinary times, and keeps back good vessels until war is imminent. If the entire system were reorganised, she might maintain in the Pacific a powerful squadron, at the same expenditure as at present.

Special instructions have been in force for some weeks past in the dockyards regarding the flushing of the drains, which are ordered to be washed through at least once a week, and attention to dust-bins, which are to be emptied daily. These precautions are said to be in view of the possibility of a visit from cholera, and instructions have been posted in various places as to the course to be pursued by individuals who may have reason to believe that they have been attacked by it. Surely these precautions are being taken somewhat late! Should not such instructions form part of the standing rules of her Majesty's Dockyards?

The following are the Russian men-of-war at present on service. At Yokohama are the Duke of Edinburgh, the flagship of Admiral Kopitoff, Commander of the Pacific Fleet, the corvette Skobeleff, and the clipper Naezdnik. Two other vessels will shortly join them, the clipper Opritchnik, which was last reported to be at Hong Kong, and the clipper Razboinik, which touched at Monte Video last week. These five men-of-war will constitute the Russian Pacific Fleet throughout the winter, and return home next summer, in accordance with the regulation recently framed reducing the period of vessels on foreign service to two years. Of the four men-of-war composing the Mediterrrnean Fleet for the winter, under Admiral Tchebischeff, the corvette Svetland is at Naples, the clipper Strelok at Trieste, the frigate Minin at Gibraltar, and the new frigate Vladimir Monomarchus at Cronstadt, which she will quit next week.

War between France and China seems to be on the verge of breaking out. The question whether the Chinese Ambassador shall demand his passports of the French Government is under consideration, and the Secretary to the Chinese Embassy declares that should the French attack Bacninh, hostilities with China must ensue. At the same time, telegraphic information from Saigon affirms that Admiral Courbet will attack Sontay as soon as reinforcements arrive. These were shortly expected, and the Marines of the French Fleet have been landed to strengthen the force at the Admiral's disposal.

Some eight one-storey brick buildings have been constructed during the present year at Aldershot, in place of as many wooden huts pulled down. At this rate of progress, it has been calculated that the reconstruction of the Camp will be completed about 87 years hence.

It certainly is due to Lieutenant-Colonel Wilkinson Shaw, the late popular Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot, that some of the credit for the invention of the War Game on models should fall to him. Colonel Shaw it was who originated the idea, which has been perfected, and introduced to the service generally, by the exertions of Lieutenant-Colonel Prior. But though recognising the service rendered by Colonel Prior, we by no means desire to overlook the still more valuable work done by Colonel Shaw.

Lieutenant R. C. Foster, R.A., has been appointed an Instructor in Military Drawing at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

The Aldershot Committee on Equipment, &c., assembled during the week, for the purpose of again going through the weary business of inspecting a number of infantrymen dressed in different patterns of the modified, many-pocketed, experimental, service coat. A valise equipment, the invention of Major Wardroper, 107th Foot, has been recently submitted to this Committee for trial and report.

Next Monday being the twenty-ninth anniversary of the battle of Inkerman, we give a list of the only officers still serving regimentally who were present at the battle. In the Cavalry, five officers, viz., Colonel J. S. Ferguson, 2nd Life Guards (cornet, 5th Dragoon Guards); Veterinary-Surgeon Harpley, Royal Horse Guards (veterinary, Royal Artillery); Captain S. Williams, Quartermaster, 4th Dragoon Guards (ranks of the regiment); Quartermaster J. A. Hefferon, 8th Hussars (trumpeter); Captain R. H. Boyle, Riding-Master, 16th Lancers (ranks of 5th Dragoon Guards). Household Brigade:—Colonel G. R. FitzRoy, Coldstream Guards (Lieutenant, 41st Foot); Brigade-Surgeon A. G. Elkington, Grenadier Guards (Surgeon); and Major John M'Blain, Quartermaster, Scots Guards (non-commissioned officer). Infantry of the Line:—Staff Paymaster R. G. Craig, 2nd Battalion, 2nd West Surrey Regiment; Colonel J. G. Harkness, 1st Battalion, 5th Fusiliers; Colonel L. O'Connor, V.C., 2nd Battalion, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers; Captain E. Knightley, Quartermaster, 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers; Lieutenant-Colonel J. P. Campbell, 30th Regiment; Captain T. H. Vickers, Quartermaster, 55th Regiment; Major F. C. Gavegan, 49th Regiment; Lieutenant-Colonel A. E. Fyler, 50th Regiment; Captain H. F. Nettles, Quartermaster, 54th Regiment; Captain T. Wood, Quartermaster, 57th Regiment; Colonel A. H. Tucker, 68th Regiment; and Quartermaster J. Lamb, Rifle Brigade. Eight out of the 12 Infantry officers were in the ranks at the time, as were two present officers of the Indian Staff Corps, in Colonel Sexton, Superintendent of Army Clothing, Bombay Presidency, and Captain Ashfield, Assistant-Cantonment Magistrate at Mhow.

The German War Office has published a return of the number of uneducated recruits—unable, that is to say, to read or write—for the last seven years, and from this return it appears that the per-centage was 2·37 per cent. in 1876; 2·13 per cent. in 1877; 1·73 per cent. in 1878; 1·80 per cent. in 1879; 1·57 per cent. in 1880; 1·59 per cent. in 1881; 1·54 per cent. in 1882; and 1·32 per cent. this year. The districts in which the proportion of totally illiterate recruits is highest are Posen (11·81 per cent.), Marienwerder (10·40 per cent.), Gumbinnen (6·76 per cent.), Bromberg (5·67 per cent.), Königsberg (4·87 per cent.), Alsace-Lorraine (4·29 per cent.), and Offeln (3·71 per cent.). In France, the proportion of illiterate recruits was 15·52 per cent. in 1876, and is even now 13 per cent., or more than in the most backward district of Germany. In justice to France, however, it should be added that the comparison does not quite run on all-fours, as in Germany the men who can sign their names are not classed as illiterate, while in France, all who cannot write from dictation are so classified.

The current number of the "Proceedings of the Royal Artillery Institution" has been forwarded to us for review. We wish our notice of it could be more favourable. We can only express our surprise that the members of a distinguished institution, which can boast of some of the most gifted writers of the day, and which has on its rolls the names of Hamley, of Charles and Henry Brackenbury, of Maurice and Hime, should allow the medal for the annual prize essay to be carried off by a fifth-rate mediocrity. We do not wish to use hard words, but there can be no object in concealing facts. With the exception of an interesting memoir of Sir E. Sabine, the contributions to the number under review are absolutely without literary merit, and are hopelessly dull from beginning to end. Unless a change comes over their spirit, the "Proceedings of the Royal Artillery Institution" will die from sheer respectability. Apparently, this is precisely the end desired by the authorities. We are informed that they cripple the work of the committee and secretary of the institution at every step. Last year, the committee proposed as a subject for the annual prize essay, "The Reorganisation of the Royal Artillery." If ever there was a subject specially marked out for discussion, it was surely this. It might well be supposed that the authorities would have been glad to have elicited public opinion regarding so important a matter. The proposal, however, failed to obtain favour in high quarters. Again, we are informed that this year, at a full meeting of members of the institution, the subject proposed for discussion, and strongly recommended by the committee, was, "The Selection and Training of Officers for the Royal Artillery." The official veto was likewise placed on this proposal. This attempt to gag public opinion we believe to be most unwise and reprehensible. We do not hesitate to condemn it in the strongest language at our command. It revives some of the worst memories of the worst days of the French Empire. Depend upon it, there is nothing to fear, there is everything to gain, from free, frank, open discussion. Dread of publicity is a confession of weakness. These attempts to stifle public opinion in the Army do incalculable harm, and disgust many able and thoughtful officers, who would otherwise be found in the front rank of supporters of the powers that be. We do not wish to be misunderstood. The views of this journal are well known. We wish to see the present régime at the Horse Guards strengthened and maintained. It will be so strengthened, if his Royal Highness and his advisers will only be true to themselves, if they will abandon their hereditary and nervous jealousy of criticism, if they will welcome, instead of crushing out, the co-operation of the Army, and if they will put themselves at the head of the popular movement, which is everywhere manifesting itself, and which is equally in favour of moderate progress, as it is opposed to violent and radical change.

The Avenir Militaire contains a long article on the Territorial Reserves. It begins by observing that since 1870 the European Powers, instead of looking to small, well-drilled, and handy Armies for success, think it their duty to depend upon the concentration of dense mobs, with which to crush their adversaries under a superior weight of men and horses. The victory of the future will remain to the most prolific nation. As far as France is concerned, the writer says that the French legislators have handed over to the War Office all the population capable of bearing arms, that is to say, twenty classes. But it appears that up to 1879 only nine classes were organised by the Staff, the other eleven being left out in the cold; and to-day there are six classes which have not been utilised. We gather from the general tone of this article that there is a want of cohesion and of sympathy existing between the permanent Army and the Reserves, and that in the event of war it would be found difficult to amalgamate a great portion of the latter force with the former. The writer says that when the officers and men of the Territorial Reserve first turned out, their presence was hailed with enthusiasm by their comrades of the Regular force; but since then all the enthusiasm has died out. However, the total reorganisation of the French Army was a big affair, and it is hardly fair to compare it with the Prussian organisation, which commenced in 1807, and which for many a long year has, as it were, become a part of the nation.

A Committee, under the presidency of Lord Morley, is shortly to assemble at the War Office, for the purpose of considering the steps desirable to be taken for the reorganisation of the Commissariat and Transport Corps.

The entire number of L'Armée Française for this week is taken up with a recapitulation of the events connected with the capitulation of Metz, and of course the scapegoat, Bazaine, is very severely handled. The writer, however, who was in Metz when it was besieged, admits that there were other officers who were guilty of weakness; and a very lamentable tale is told by the same paper of French officers, after the capitulation, disposing of their horses and other goods to the Germans, who were much amused at an act which, the writer says, bordered on indelicacy. This way of observing the anniversary of a great national disaster is like doing penance.

In a recent issue, a correspondent called attention to some of the questions set at the last examination of Lieutenants of Militia for commissions in the Line. Since then the list of successful competitors has been published, and the result in many cases has certainly justified our correspondent's remarks. With regard to the paper on fortification, in which an error occurred in the printing of one of the questions, thereby rendering its solution an impossibility, many candidates who were considered as certain of obtaining good marks have failed to do so, and attribute their failure to the irregularities of the paper. Not only was one question wrongly printed, but another, the last, referred solely to permanent, not to field fortification, and was therefore outside the subject demanded by Regulations. The military-law paper contained an ambiguous question, which no amount of hard work could have successfully grappled with. Now, it is doubtless of little importance to the War Office which out of the 300 candidates competing obtain commissions; but is this slipshod system of examination fair to the competitors? The mode of conducting these examinations, too, seems to leave room for improvement. We are assured, on the best authority, that at this last examination the candidates attending at Aldershot had one of the afternoon papers issued to them at the end of the morning, and were thus enabled to see the questions before the actual time for commencing the paper, and that, too, outside the examination-room. It has been said that Militia officers who have been offered cavalry commissions, on the strength of having passed creditably, but not successfully, refuse them. The reason of this may possibly be that they are offered too late. When an officer has spent much time and money in preparing himself for the next examination, and is given this offer only a week before his second or third trial, as was the case last time, he naturally rejects it, and, as in some notable cases lately, passes, and elects to serve in the Infantry.

General Campenon has already announced his intention of bringing forward a Bill in the French Chamber with the view of providing a colonial army. The present Minister of War, when serving under M. Gambetta, proposed to introduce such a measure, but, like the famous Bombastes Furioso, "before the word was out, his spirit fled;" or rather, before the Bill could be laid on the table, the Cabinet in which General Campenon sat was overthrown. The colonial army will be composed not of youthful conscripts unable to resist a foreign climate, but of veterans, who will enjoy extra pay. A special corps will also be formed in the mother-country for the purpose of furnishing reinforcements to the colonies in case of necessity, without breaking up the battalions at home, as was done when troops were required for Tunis.

General Bouët, who recently commanded the French forces in Tonquin, but who did not get on with the Civil Commissioner, who, it appears, wished to command in chief, has returned to France, and has furnished his Government with much interesting information. According to the Figaro, he declares the position of the French to have been excellent until after the affair of Namdinh, in July, when the Chinese regulars put in an appearance, and it became necessary to reckon with them. These troops were better armed and disciplined than had been supposed, and the difficulties in the way of conquering the country at once became apparent. Civil Commissioner Harmand was thunderstruck, and the General much alarmed at the responsibilities incurred. They plucked up courage; the combat of August 15 increased their apprehensions, but it was only on September 1 that they became fully alive to the magnitude of the obstacles caused by the interference of China. It became necessary to give up all idea of conquering the provinces situated to the north and north-west of Tonquin. It appears that the French have now 10,000 men and thirty vessels-of-war of various descriptions in Tonquin; but now that the Government has obtained so large a majority in the Chamber, the probability is that strong reinforcements will be speedily despatched to the scene of action. The Progrès Militaire, in an article written previous to the debate in the Chamber, said:—"We must show ourselves united in face of our adversaries; with or against our will we are at Tonquin, and we owe it to ourselves to remain there, even should we have to chastise severely, by an energetic action directed against Canton and the great commercial ports of the Celestial Empire, the duplicity of these Mandarins. The Ministry will then come out conquerors from this debate, but the victory will do more to shake than to fortify a Government which ought to understand that when we have 60,000 men in Algeria, where we lose 100 officers a year, when Tunis absorbs an effective of 14,000 men, when there are so many military obligations to perform on our frontiers, this is too much for a country still bleeding from wounds inflicted by the Treaty of Frankfort."

The question of having a permanent head of the Army in France has often been mooted, but our neighbours seem to be afraid that it would be dangerous to invest any officer with so much authority. Considering the frequent changes of War Ministers in France since the fall of the Empire, it is really wonderful to see what extensive reforms have been carried out in every branch of the service. The Army, in fact, has been thoroughly reorganised, in spite of one Minister often undoing what his predecessor had done, especially in small matters. Thus, General Farre, when in office, abolished the drum, which was re-established by his successor; another War Minister abolished the white-cotton gloves, which the French soldiers had worn since Louis Philippe was king,—the gloves were re-established by the succeeding Minister. There have been frequent changes of uniform, and a M. Jules Richard informs us of the following little fact:—"The contracts for the clothing of the Army have nearly expired, and since the question of renewing them arose—and this is no small matter—five Ministers have succeeded each other in two years,—Generals Farre, Campenon, Billot, Thibaudin, and Campenon (a second time). The first four did not share the same views, and it is probable that Campenon (bis) will differ from them also." It is pointed out that this is a very serious affair, not only for the Army, but for commerce.

The Avenir Militaire reminds us that when General Campenon, who has just been reappointed Minister of War in France, took office in January, 1882, he made a long statement to the Chamber of his views upon Military matters. He expressed himself in favour of active service in the Army being reduced to a minimum of three years, and of a more equitable distribution of military obligations. At the same time, General Campenon declared that recent events in North Africa had established the necessity, first, of recruiting the Algerian Army with soldiers older than those forming the Home Army, and next, of organising a body of troops outside the Army Corps, and capable of being employed in such an affair as that of Tunis. In fact, General Campenon announced his intention of introducing a series of beneficial reforms; but before he could lay them before the Chamber, he was turned out of office. To judge by the state of political parties in France at the present moment, it does not appear likely his tenure of the War Office will be longer in 1883 than it was in 1882.

"Retired List" writes:—"Until I saw the Gazette of the 19th ult., I was under the same impression as yourself with regard to Article 87, Royal Warrant of March 11, 1882. I joined the Militia under the same warrant and about the same time as the officer alluded to in the above Gazette, but I was transferred from the Half-Pay List to the Retired List some months ago; consequently, I have no chance of getting back to the Line, much as I should like it. It would be interesting to know the reason of this difference of proceeding with regard to officers similarly situated."

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Route-marching has been carried out by the various corps during the week, and but little else in the shape of military exercise has been going on.

Quarters for about five Infantry battalions are now vacant in the North and South Camps. Many of the huts have not been in occupation for nearly two years, and are in an advanced stage of dilapidation and decay.

It is high time that the question of lighting up the two Camps after dark should be seriously considered. The present system of lighting by means of oil lamps is a miserable failure.

Lieutenant-General Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., K.C.B., has returned from leave of absence during the week, and resumed command of the Division. Sir Archibald has taken up his residence at Cove Park.

Assistant-Commissary-General of Ordnance H. P. Moors is appointed a member of the Permanent Committee on Equipment, &c., vice Deputy-Commissary-General of Ordnance H. A. Russell, C.B., left the station.

Surgeons Cross and Conolly, A.M.D., have been appointed Instructor and Assistant Instructor, respectively, of the Depôt Army Hospital Corps.

Deputy-Commissary-General H. Brownrigg, Commissariat and Transport Staff, has assumed the duties of Senior Commissariat Officer, vice Deputy-Commissary-General T. C. Blunt, ordered to Portsmouth.

The Divisional Drag Hounds have been out during the week, on Monday a heather line, and on Thursday a cross-country line. Lieutenant-Colonel French, Queen's Bays, is now Master of the Hounds.

CAVALRY COMMISSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—As much has been recently written in various papers concerning commissions in the Cavalry, I venture to send this to you, it being also on the same subject. In your paper a few weeks ago, you suggested that Infantry and Cavalry candidates should be kept separate. The War Office have taken a step in this direction, for now candidates return their names (1) for both Infantry or Cavalry, expressing a preference for one or the other; (2) for Infantry only; (3) for Cavalry only. Let us now cross out (1), leaving only (2) and (3), and, keeping the Cavalry candidates separate from the Infantry, just as the University candidates are, take a bad case of what might follow. Suppose 20 vacancies given for the Cavalry, and only 12 candidates, the War Office will then have to fall back on the old plan of offering Cavalry commissions to Infantry candidates who have failed. This will attract the attention of the Press, and the facts will be stated; the result being that, at the next examination, the number of candidates will be doubled in all probability, and from that period the examination for the Cavalry will also become competitive. To carry the scheme a little further, at Sandhurst the Cavalry candidates should be exercised in Cavalry movements under the command of an able Cavalry officer, and should wear a uniform more akin to that of the Cadets at Woolwich than to that of the Royal Military College cadets, for since Cavalry forms the eyes and ears of an army in time of war, it is only right that its officers should be instructed in their duties from the very first.—I am, &c., CAVALRY CANDIDATE.

Reviews.

The Elements of Military Administration. By Major J. Buxton. (Kegan Paul and Co.)

This volume, edited by Colonel Brackenbury, R.A., is intended to explain the system of administration in ordinary times in the British Army, and the system for active service. The editor draws attention to the fact that there exists no book giving details of military administration, because everything was "in a state of transition." Why this should have been so, and why it continues to be so are questions which the work professes to answer. It seems to be generally admitted that military administration cannot be altered, until some new departure has been taken, because the system is faulty from the root. It will be found difficult by those who understand questions of military reform and Army reorganisation, to think that we are within a measurable distance of that golden age described by the editor, when this volume shall have become obsolete, and when our grandsons, taking it down from some dusty shelf, exclaim, "Was this state of things ever possible?" The conclusion arrived at by Major Buxton is that the English system is extremely complicated, and that the complication arises from centralisation. As a matter of fact, everything is entrusted to the "War Office." No central office could do that to which the War Office wishes the public to believe it is equal. Its establishment is fully occupied in time of peace. Then comes a war, and a plethora of work. A War Ministry, to be equal to the strain of war, should have little or no routine in times of peace, and should be engaged in preparation. The great superiority of the German system is accounted for by the fact that the officers are trusted at every stage, and that responsibility is divided with division of labour. The author's project of reorganisation, and the course which he advocates to rescue us from the position which, as regards military matters, we have so long occupied, may be briefly described as a complete revolution which there is little likelihood of seeing in our time. Major Buxton contends that we require for foreign service a body of professional soldiers to serve for 21 or any other suitable number of years, with a pension at the end of the term. For European warfare, we are in the same position as any Continental nation. We need a reserve, and, therefore, a short-service army. The Foreign-service Army, enlisted for years, requires fewer recruits, becomes acclimatised, and has few green men in its ranks. It is never relieved, though it moves about abroad. Moreover, the harassing question of home and foreign reliefs is closed. Recruits go out, and time-expired men come home, that is all. The course suggested for the home-service army is to form large regiments, thoroughly localised, and managing their own administration; here, short service is the rule, and the regiment can organise its own reserve men, in its own district. In meeting some of the objections to the scheme, the author refers to the allegation that men often enlist for the sake of travel and change, and few would enlist in an Army which never left home. This he admits to be true of the men we get now; but they would offer themselves for the Foreign-service Army; and if long terms of service were the rule, we should want fewer recruits. We could, therefore, pick our men, and the foreign battalions would be the gainers. As to the European Army, there are thousands of men in England with strong military tastes, who cannot afford to gratify their wishes for soldiering. Recruits such as these would, no doubt, willingly do a short term of soldiering at home, not far from friends, and would go forward for a campaign or a fight, but could not make up their minds to years of peace-time drudgery abroad, to the breaking of all home ties, and to the sacrifice of all prospects of future success in civil life. "This is the class," continues the author, "which we would wish to see forming the European Army of England, and certainly the only stuff which ought to find its way into the Reserve. Given an army which goes abroad only for war, this class will join it; you will tap a new and hitherto unbroached mine of recruits, and you will provide an outlet for the aspirations of these men. This is where a home-service, short-service army will find its recruits." In concluding his observations, the author presents a programme, in which he firmly believes is wrapped a sound military policy worthy of the nation. "Before it, all the changes that have been seen of late years sink into the merest trivialities." First, the welfare of the English Army lies in decentralisation of administration; second, in order to obtain decentralisation, and to confer upon regiments and bodies intermediate between them and the War Office a certain and large meed of independent action, those bodies must in peace-time be localised; third, in order to localise the European portion of our forces, the routine of foreign service must be given up; fourth, the formation of large regiments, economically carrying out their own administrative affairs. Such is the programme,—one that presents, according to Major Buxton, few, if any, real difficulties, but one "which is to confer upon the Minister who carries out the leading features of its policy the reward of being regarded as the Scharnhorst of England." We fear the man is not yet born.

Messrs. Marion and Co., of Soho Square, have just published a Military Album, which is well entitled to create a sensation. It is a large volume, formed to combine strength with neatness, while apertures allow photographs to slip on flush without tearing or bulging. The outside cover, finished in dark enamelled leather and heavily ornamented with gold work, presents a spirited group of cavalry. This may serve as a fitting introduction to the frontispiece, a picture of high merit. Upwards of fifty soldiers, some mounted and some on foot, are grouped in circular form with considerable skill; while the colours of the regiments are fully displayed, as also the varied uniforms, which contribute so much to the effect that is produced. In the alternate pages of this gorgeous album there are resting-places for photos and vignettes, and immediately after each page follows one richly embellished, and illustrating some episode of military life. It is not unlikely that young and old and middle-aged ladies who, as a matter of course, possess an album, will discard it, when they have completely satisfied themselves that the "Military" album—the handiwork of Messrs. Marion and Co.—must inevitably eclipse it.

Messrs. Routledge and Co. are, as usual, early in the field with Christmas books, some of which we hope to notice next week.

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—You were good enough, in your issue of the 13th ult., to grant me a small space to protest, from a Naval point of view, against the line of argument pursued by Lord Henry Lennox in his discussion on the ironclads of the Navy, in the Times of the 3rd ult. I took exception (1), to the utter uselessness of discussing the amount of ironclad tonnage either party had built when in power; and (2), to the measuring the efficiency of two Navies solely by a comparison of the respective numbers of their battle-ships. I did, however, recognise, and in a certain sense appreciate, a political current underrunning Lord Henry's arguments, but when a Naval officer—and one evidently of no mean repute—in your last issue, takes my letter as his key-note, and blows the trumpet of alarm still louder, I wonder whether my studies and observation have been in vain, and I am living in that "fools' paradise" which his imagination so vividly depicts. It is but scant courtesy to express one's dissent from the arguments of another without stating one's reasons, but I am satisfied no possible good can arise from following the line of argument pursued by your correspondent; it rests simply upon a basis of confidence or no confidence. I am full of the former, and therefore he will pardon me when I say I share in few of his views, and none of his gloomy forebodings. But, Sir, my sole object in asking you for further space is to point out that the assertion in my letter is not so "off-hand" as your correspondent is pleased to allege. Though he did me the honour to "read it carefully," he has entirely missed its point; had he been less influenced by the danger which he discerns so close at hand, he would have seen how studiously I avoided all invidious comparisons, as being, to say the least of them, highly unprofitable; and when I invoked Naval history in support of the principle that "superiority on the ocean does not rest mainly upon the number, but upon the excellency of the individual types of ships and men," I will frankly admit I was alluding to Anglo-Saxon victories, but in no bragging spirit. I had in my mind's eye at the moment (though I did not deem it necessary to say so), Sir J. Jervis, off St. Vincent, with 15 battle-ships opposed to 27; Sir James Saumarez, in "the Straits," with 6 to 12; Lord Nelson, off Trafalgar, with 27 to 33; and the frigate actions in the early part of the American War. If these instances do not confirm my assertion, they at least absolve me from off-handedness. I well remember the account of our Naval battles by that grand old Anglophobist, M. Thiers, to which your correspondent refers me, and thought the deductions about as worthy of note as the reports in the Moniteur of the day. Though I strongly deprecate the spirit in which your correspondent and Lord Henry Lennox have written, I would not wish you to infer that I consider the matériel of the Navy adequate to meet our requirements. I do not; but, in my judgment, it is not in battle-ships we are deficient, but in torpedo ships to support them, and cruisers to patrol our ocean highways. As I have before intimated, the question is mainly one of confidence. We have, it is true, great responsibilities; but, Sir, we possess immense advantages for war purposes. We have a splendid Marine, coaling stations throughout the world, and, above all, a resolute and determined people. I am not so fortunate as your correspondent, to be precluded by the rules of the service from signing my name; but, as it is unnecessary on this occasion, I prefer subscribing myself, yours faithfully,

NO ALARMIST.

[Circumstances alter cases, and we doubt very much whether any English admiral having under his command six ironclads, would be wise in facing an enemy's fleet composed of double that number of battle ships. The question would resolve itself then into one of speed, either when attacking or retreating.—ED. A. & N. G.]

Non-commissioned officers of the Corps of Royal Marines are to have the first offer of service in the Canadian North-Western Mounted Police, in the coming reorganisation of that force. They must be men who have completed their time in the service or are about to do so. The pay will be 6s. per day, including rations—meat, bread, vegetables, sugar, &c., fuel, and quarters. Their duties, owing to the immense extent of the country to be traversed, will be responsible. They will be required to serve for five years, and their homes will be in the western prairie from the borders of Manitoba to the Rocky Mountains. The kit to be supplied is understood to be a very liberal one. It is much desired to introduce the English Royal Marine Corps element into the force, and candidates of the old corps who may wish to join are to apply to Capt. Deane, care of Mr. Fortescue, N. W. Mounted Police Branch of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada. Letters need not be prepaid.

THE CHANNEL SQUADRON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The serenity of the officers and men of the Channel Squadron is at the present time somewhat ruffled, owing to the very unwelcome intelligence which we have just received, namely, that of proceeding to sea again in three weeks' time, after having enjoyed the privilege of leave to the extent of seven days to each watch. Ever since the Channel Fleet first began to exist they have been allowed two or three months in the home ports, for the very necessary purpose of making good defects which have been incurred during the year. It has sometimes been in the summer months, but more generally in the winter, so that the men may spend Christmas at home, in the bosoms of their families. This year those same bosoms will be empty and void. Since last Christmas we have enjoyed seven days' leave, granted on our return to England last August. Now we are to have it augmented by another seven days. Fourteen days in the year! Home ports are forbidden ground to ships on a home station. Men get appointments in the Channel Fleet as a reward for their labours in foreign climes. And this is the result. Our ungrateful country seems to hate the sight of us in England, and we are sent abroad on every available opportunity. We have just been through the trying ordeal of preparing for the annual inspection by the Lords of the Admiralty, and if their report is to be believed, have come out with "flying colours." Through all this we have been cheerful and happy in the thought that when it was all over we should proceed to our home ports, and be able to put in two or three weeks' leave. We are supposed to be entitled to six weeks' leave during the year, but, as a matter of fact, we can barely get a month, and this year, as I have already mentioned, it has dwindled down to a fortnight. The inspection is over, their Lordships have gone, and we shall see no more of them for a year, and the reward is ours,—a rich one, indeed, which consists of an order to go abroad for the winter months, starting probably in November. We can all guess what this means. It means simply that we are to remain abroad until next March, or early in April, when the Admiral commanding is to be relieved. In consequence of this, general discontent prevails. Murmurs, which before were conspicuous by their absence, are now long and loud. This is no exaggeration of facts, for every one feels, to use a slang, though forcible expression, that we have been "bounced" out of our leave. Our leave this summer was denied us, on the understanding that we should have the usual amount in the winter; and now we are to have neither. I feel sure that this is not generally known as yet outside the service, or we should see sympathising letters in the papers.—I am, &c., HOME (?) STATION.

H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught was entertained by a large number of private friends at a banquet at Limmer's Hotel on Wednesday evening. H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge presided. Among those present were:—H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G., Col. Stanley Clarke (equerry), H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, K.G., Col. the Hon. W. Colville (equerry), H.R.H. the Duke of Albany, K.G., Lieut. H.R.H. Prince Louis of Battenburg, Field-Marshal Lord Napier, Admiral of the Fleet Hon. Sir H. Keppel, Admiral Lord Alcester; Gens. Sir Lintorn Simmons and Sir E. Johnson; Lieut.-Gens. Sir D. Probyn, Sir A. Herbert, Sir E. Whitmore, Sir G. Willis, and Sir A. Alison; Major-Gens. Fraser, Marshall, Dillon, Hon. W. Feilding, Sir C. Brownlow, Elliot, and Harman; Surg.-Gen. W. Mackinson; Brigdr.-Gen. Reilly; Cols. Hall, Smith, Sir W. Elphinstone, Moncrieff, R. Harrison, A. Williams, Lord W. Seymour, G. Wigram, G. Knox, Keith Fraser, Hon. Savage Mostyn, and Hon. H. Byng; Lieut.-Cols. Lord E. Clinton, Viscount de Vesci, Lord Algernon Lennox, Hon. E. Boscawen, G. Bayley, C. Slade, Hons. R. Talbot and O. Montagu, Molyneux, I. Herbert, Pole-Carew, and Fryer; and Surg.-Major Scott, &c.

A Member of Parliament writes to the Times:—"We have lately heard a great deal about the trials of compositions on the bottoms of her Majesty's ships, and judging from your remarks upon the result of the Admiralty inspection at Portsmouth on H.M.S. Mercury (a steel despatch vessel), a decisive result has at last been obtained. As this is a subject which, if anything, is of more importance to the commercial world than even to her Majesty's service, may I suggest that this vessel should be allowed to remain in her present condition (in dry dock) for a short period, so that gentlemen representing commercial interests may, like myself, be afforded an opportunity of looking at her, one or two compositions on her seeming to be of a very remarkable character, and to have given results such as have never before been obtained, I should say, on any other vessel?"

The Royal Albert, one of the old line-of-battle ships which has for many years been lying at moorings in the Hamoaze, had a narrow escape from sinking on Oct. 26. The Royal Albert, which was one of the ships engaged in the Black Sea during the Russian war, was sold by the Government a few months ago to Messrs. Castle and Co., of London, but a controversy respecting her fittings having arisen between her new owners and the Admiralty she has, pending its settlement, been moored in the stream off Tor Point, awaiting removal to London. It was found that there were from 12 to 14 ft. of water in the hold, and that it was still flowing in at a rapid rate. A powerful fire float, manned by seamen from the Steam Reserve, was brought alongside, and, with the tug, was speedily at work pumping the water out. So great, however, was the influx of water that two hours' continuous pumping by the tug and float reduced the water by only three or four feet. At the end of that time the Scotia, tug, arrived, and assisted in the work of pumping, and greater progress was then made. It is thought that the sluice valve for flooding the magazine must have been tampered with or opened. An inquiry has been ordered with the view of ascertaining, if possible, how the valve became opened.

The Forward and Myrmidon will shortly be commissioned at Sheerness.

Capt. Lord Charles Beresford, R.N., when addressing electors of the Pembroke Boroughs on Monday, made the following remarks on the state and condition of the Navy:—"This was really a very serious thing. What he was going to say he had said at many places, and he did not blame either Government for the state of the Navy. He thought it was the country's fault, and that, so far as Government action went, both Governments were alike to blame, because they would not spend enough upon it. The men, officers, and ships were very good, but it was not properly gunned. We had not gone to the expense of putting breechloading guns into it, and ship for ship, it was not so good as the French. He wished not to be misunderstood. Taking ships of the same class in both Navies, it was not so good, ship for ship, as the French. In their small craft the French were very much better, and if two of this class met, there was no reason why the French should not knock the English one into a cocked hat in a few minutes. He said this without hesitation, because he knew it, and could prove it. The French had better guns, could train all round, were more speedy, and had machine shell-guns. They could get their shot at us while we were moving round, and could hit us three times for once we could hit them. And it was to be remembered that now one shot won a battle between two ships. The Navy was, unfortunately, a very poor service; the officers were very poor men, and if one of them got up and said what he was now saying, he might not get a ship. He (Lord Charles) did not care a fig whether he got a ship or not. He had to address other meetings an evening or two hence, at which he would speak at greater length of the Navy and shipbuilding matters. He would only add on this occasion that the cost of the Navy was the rate of insurance which England paid for the continuance of her present state of prosperity. If they looked at it in this way, they would see what he meant. Look at our mercantile marine and the supply of our food. This had to be protected, and if our Navy was once beaten we could do absolutely nothing, and we should be beaten so effectually that there would be nothing left but to make the best terms with the enemy we could get. He then gave examples of inadequate sums voted for the Navy, and the very small proportion it formed of what the Navy was expected to protect. In 1854 the estimates for the Navy amounted to seven and a half millions, while our exports and imports were £268,000,000. In 1880, the Navy estimates were only ten and a half millions, while the exports and imports had run up to £697,000,000. Now this was a very important thing, for he looked upon the Navy as being essentially necessary for the safety of the country. The Navy estimates or rate of insurance was $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. of what it had to protect, and in 1880 it was only $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. These were actual facts, and he asked them to think over them when they went home. He would have to speak at greater length of the Navy one or two evenings hence, and, therefore, he passed on to other matters."

FRENCH ANNEXATIONS ON THE WEST COAST.

The Corisco brings the following news from the West Coast of Africa:—"A French troopship arrived on Sept. 24 at Gaboon from the River Senegal, bringing stores and reliefs. The vessel was 20 days out from Dakar. The commander stated that the Admiral of the African station had received instructions to annex the coast-line of all southern ports as far as the Congo, along which the Gaboon tariff was to be strictly enforced. To enable this scheme to be carried out, the Admiral was to receive 600 soldiers from Goree and 100 douaniers. These latter are customs' officers, whose duty it will be to levy and collect duties, and otherwise put into execution the restrictions included in the new classification of the Gaboon. It was further stated that the temporary carrying-out of the regulations would be in the hands of the military, and the excise authorities would attend to them from the beginning of the new year. It seems that this coast-line which the French are going to annex is some 250 miles in extent, and includes some dozen towns. At latest reports there were three French war-vessels in the vicinity, and so placed as to command the three most important points." At a meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce held on Wednesday, it was resolved to address a letter to the Government to point out the urgent necessity of maintaining the free navigation of African rivers, and to prevent annexation by any Power.

A grand bazaar, under the patronage of H.R.H. the Duchess of Albany, in aid of the Building Fund of St. Gabriel's, in the district of St. James's, Norlands, will be held at the Kensington Town Hall, on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday next. The new church of St. Gabriel's, which was consecrated by the Bishop of London in last July, is situate in the heart of the densely populous and very poor district known as "The Potteries." All the sittings, numbering some 800, are free, and a substantial and growing congregation of work-people shows that the edifice supplies a real want. The object of the bazaar is to pay off the remaining balance of debt.

"J. H." writes:—"The facility with which marginal titles are found for regiments now-a-days is truly wonderful. The Territorial system seems to work very badly in this respect, since the Army is evidently in excess of the territory, when it is found necessary to allocate certain regiments upon boundaries or borders. For instance, we have 'the South Wales Borderers,' 'the King's Own Borderers,' and 'the Border Regt.,' a somewhat mixed description of these battalions. If, at the least, it be found necessary to retain these marginal titles, would it not be more satisfactory, and better in all respects (as well as in accordance with the Territorial scheme), to have some clear and distinct knowledge of their nationality, which could be simply arranged by styling the above regiments respectively, the 'Welsh,' 'Scotch,' and 'English Borderers?'"

THE NEW MAJORS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—So many letters have been published by you on this subject, that I venture to put my case through you before the public and the authorities, who, I trust, may be induced before long to take steps to rectify such a state of things. I purchased my lieutenancy and company, giving a good deal over regulation, with the idea of getting on in the service, and now, under the alterations in the Regulations, I find myself, after nearly 26 years' service, in the same regiment, compelled to command a company, which I shall probably have to do for four years longer, as I see no chance of becoming second lieutenant-colonel sooner. Now, besides commanding a company, I have usually to do the subaltern's work of it as well. We have no captains and very few subalterns to do duty, as these officers spend most of their time at garrison class, signalling classes, &c., or qualifying for the Staff Corps, Commissariat, or Pay Departments. Within twelve months five or six officers have left the regiment for the Staff Corps, and they have not yet been replaced, and probably those that do come will simply learn their work with the regiment, and in their turn leave for the Staff Corps. There are now five or six of the few subalterns left to us waiting to go to the Staff Corps as soon as they are allowed. No wonder they take no interest in their present regiment. One effect of all this is that nearly all the work of a regiment falls on the few senior officers. I have to do the work of captain and subaltern in the regiment, and, in addition, the work of field-officer in this garrison, where the duties are particularly heavy, and the worst of it is, I have spent all my money to attain this very enviable position, and I am serving in the same rank and doing the same exalted (?) duties as officers years my junior, who have paid nothing for their steps (luckily for them). I receive no interest for the money I have spent, although the Government keep my principal, and I suffer all this to attain to the enviable position of THE SENIOR MAJOR.

P.S.—If I retire, I should get (deducting the interest of my purchase-money) about £100 a year pension, after 26 years' service.

SORE BACKS.

"Hussar and Lancer" writes:—"Some time ago I sent a letter for publication in the Army and Navy Gazette, practically pointing out that from the construction of the so-called hussar saddle, to allow the dragoon to rise in the stirrups, is safe to give more sore backs on the march than the proposers of such ideas would wish were known to Lord Wolseley. Having served in two cavalry corps from 1825, I write from practical knowledge and experience. A 'Lancer' writes in your Gazette many true and useful hints. When I joined the 4th Light Dragoons (now Hussars), it was during the long-stirrup regulation of two inches below the ancle-joint, the heel well down; I conclude that with that length our cavalry rode throughout the Peninsula. I had never heard of a man being ruptured, except at riding-drill, without stirrups. I served seven years with the late Capt. Percy Williams in the 9th Lancers; no one in the regiment ever saw or heard of his habit of riding many hours daily at a trot on a rough-paced hack, with stirrups up. He might have done so on his handsome charger, 'George,' on the road for pleasure occasionally. The saddle he rode in at parades and at field-days was one of his own construction, as near a hunting-saddle as the regulations of the service allowed. He was undoubtedly a capital rider across country, but had a very unmilitary seat when at drills. I agree with 'Lancer,' the equipment of a dragoon should, if possible, be made light, but I cannot see how breast-plate and crupper can be abolished; all horses' backs are not shaped alike. Dragoons have sometimes horrid troopers to ride, and the boon to rise in the trot in their case would be accepted as a relief on the march; but if it does become the regulation, the authorities may make their minds up to the fact that there will be a strong muster of sore backs."

"Observer" writes:—"With reference to the paragraph in the Queen's Regulations to which again you have recently adverted, viz., that while majors whose commissions as such date prior to July 1, 1881, are exempted from reverting to the command of companies, there is a failure to supply captains in their stead. But, such being the state of things, would it not argue that officers commanding regiments so situated should take the initiative with a view to have captains supplied, by requesting additional company commanders, where needed, on the ground that all supernumerary captains, hitherto relied on, have been absorbed; while subalterns, also falling below their reduced establishment, can be ill spared for other duties than their own on foreign service? Whatever the ideas of 'a peace-at-any-price' Government, the Commander-in-Chief can scarcely be a party to such apathy and false economy, tending to cripple the service. Colonels, anyhow, are responsible for their regiments being entire and fit for any exigency—the most immediate. The existing very attenuated condition of home battalions may suggest that the required officers can be supplied thence. Yet this is but 'a hand-to-mouth' policy, which may be carried, as it is being carried, too far, for the sake of saving a few pounds. The Territorial regiment is thus reduced below its establishment of company commanders, which the late Secretary for War, on being questioned in the House on the point, said would be maintained at twenty, as previous to reorganisation."

"A Perplexed P.M.C." writes:—"I am a Mess President; I have not passed the Staff College. A guest having partaken of dinner at our mess, it falls to my lot to divide the cost of our friend's dinner amongst the whole of the officers, in proportion to their daily pay (vide paragraph 67, Section VIII., Q.R., 1883). I have nearly demented myself (and my friends) over compound proportion and decimals. I have failed to solve the problem; can you or your readers help?"

The Army.

3rd Dragoon Guards. The head-quarters leave Edinburgh for Manchester, on relief by the Scots Greys.

7th Dragoon Guards. The embarkation of the regiment for India will take place at the end of the year.

2nd Dragoons (Royal Scots Greys). The regiment has arrived in Scotland from Ireland, to relieve the 3rd Dragoon Guards at Edinburgh.

17th Lancers. The Times of India says:—"The people of Mhow will be sorry to part with the 17th Lancers, the famous 'Death or Glory Boys,' to call them by one of their regimental nicknames, who, it will be remembered, came on to India at the close of the war in South Africa four years ago. They have been ordered to Lucknow to relieve the 10th Hussars (who have just completed ten years' Indian service), and their place in Central India—for military purposes a portion of the Bombay Presidency—will be taken by the 7th (the Princess Royal's) Dragoon Guards, from the capital of East Anglia. The 7th Dragoon Guards left India, after a previous spell of tropical service, about sixteen years ago."

13th Hussars. Gen. J. Lawrenson, colonel of the regiment, died on Tuesday at the Alexandra Hotel, Hyde Park Corner, aged 82. The deceased entered the Army as a cornet in 1818, and obtained a lieutenancy in 1821. He was promoted to a captaincy in 1825; became brevet major in 1838, major in 1839, and lieutenant-colonel in 1845. He became colonel in 1854, and commanded the 17th Lancers in the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, taking part in the cavalry affair of Bulganac and the battle of the Alma. In July, 1855, he was appointed, with the rank of brigadier-general, to the command of the Heavy Brigade, consisting of the 1st, 4th, and 5th Dragoon Guards, and the 1st, 2nd, and 6th Dragoons, which he held during the battle of Tchernaya. In the following December, he succeeded Sir James Scarlett in the command of the British Cavalry in the East, which command he held until the return of the Army in 1856. For his services in the Crimea he received the medal with two clasps, the Sardinian and Turkish medals, and the 4th class of the Medjidie. His subsequent promotions were,—major-gen., 1860; lieut.-gen., 1868; and gen., 1875. He had held the colonelcy of the 13th Hussars since 1868.

18th Hussars. The regiment has been scattered in detachments for over four years, 15 weeks at the Curragh Camp in its full force, over 500; nine weeks under canvas, horses in open sheds all the time; about 44 field days, besides six troops completing musketry course; on field days averaging from four to six hours in saddle, few days without rain. Casualties, one Hussar died, two horses destroyed. Highly complimented for smartness in appearance and working, both in the field and dismounted, by the Inspector-General of Cavalry, S. C. Fraser, K.C.B., V.C., Oct. 17. Regimental orders by Lieut.-Col. Harold Malet, commanding 18th Hussars, Curragh, Oct. 17, 1883:—"The commanding officer congratulates all ranks on the high approval expressed by the Inspector-General of Cavalry of the steadiness and smart appearance of the regiment, both in the field and dismounted, at his annual inspection, concluded this day. The commanding officer fully appreciates the united labour which has led to this well-deserved praise, a labour cheerfully undertaken and well carried out, under exceptionally trying circumstances, by aid of that which never fails, esprit de corps."

19th Hussars. The regiment will shortly return home from Egypt.

20th Hussars. Major Graves, Adjt. of the Staffordshire Yeomanry Cavalry, is to continue in that appointment on his promotion for another year, to complete his period of staff service.

6th Royal Warwickshire Regiment. Lieut. Ray, 2nd Batn., has been appointed interpreter.

7th Royal Fusiliers. The Madras Mail, announcing the death of Major and Pymr. Moore, says:—"Major Moore, pymr. 2nd Batn. Royal Fusiliers, at Bellary, was attacked with an apoplectic fit on Sept. 29, and died yesterday (Sunday) morning at 4 a.m. The deceased was a deservedly popular officer, and the news of his death will be received with regret by all who knew him."

14th West Yorkshire Regiment. Lieut. Williams has passed the higher standard in Hindostanee.

15th East Yorkshire Regiment. The 2nd Batn., one of the most efficient and popular regiments which has ever served at Poona, leaves that station next month for Bombay. The Times of India says:—"Lieut.-Col. Dashwood is now at home on leave, and Lieut.-Col. Hallowes is in command. Both Col. Hallowes and his officers have taken a leading part in the gaieties of the Deccan capital, and the fancy-dress ball which they gave a few weeks ago at the Council Hall is pronounced by everybody who attended it to be the most successful entertainment of the season. The regiment will be much missed at Poona. Coming here with such a high reputation, we are sure they will receive a hearty welcome from the residents of Bombay."

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. Lieut. Browne, 2nd Batn., is under orders to join the regimental depôt.

Lieut. and Assist. Gunnery-Instructor A. F. Gatliff, R.M.L.I., has been ordered to join the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines, for the purpose of undergoing a short course of garrison instruction.

The Deputy-Adjt.-General of the Royal Marines has notified that in future officers' foreign service is to be computed in years and days, instead of years, months, and days, as heretofore.

Lieut. Cummings, assistant-gunnery-instructor, R.M.L.I., has been granted leave of absence for two months, which will expire on Dec. 20.

The standard height for recruits in the Royal Marine Light Infantry has been reduced as follows, viz.:—Under 20 years of age, from 5 ft. 6 in. to 5 ft. 5½ in. and above 20 years of age, from 5 ft. 6½ in. to 5 ft 6 in.

58th Northumberland Regiment. Capt. Bell has been recommended for appointment as adjt., in succession to Major Chaytor, promoted.

62nd Wiltshire Regiment. Lieut. Elderton has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

65th York and Lancaster Regiment. Lieut. McNair is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 14th Bengal N.I.

67th Hampshire Regiment. Lieut. O'Donoghue has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

70th East Surrey Regiment. Lieut. Baylis has passed the higher-standard examination in Hindostanee.

78th Seaforth Highlanders. The death is announced of Col. T. R. H. Drummond-Hay. The deceased was born in 1821. He entered the Army as ensign in the 42nd Highlanders in 1839, and served with them in Ireland, the Ionian Islands, Malta, and Bermuda; exchanged in 1851 into the 78th Highlanders, and served with them at Aden, and in the Bombay and Bengal Presidencies, as well as in the Persian Campaign of 1857, when he acted as Brigade-Major during the expedition to Burasjoon, including the battle of Khoosh-Ab, and the bombardment of Mahomera. He served in the Indian Campaign of 1857-8, including the defence of Lucknow and the position of the Alumbagh, the capture of Lucknow, and the battle of Bareilly (Persian medal, the Mutiny medal and two clasps, one year's service for Lucknow, and the thanks of the Governor-General of India). He obtained the brevet rank of major in 1858, and that of brevet lieut.-col. in 1861. He retired on half-pay in 1864, and received the hon. rank of colonel in 1881.

84th York and Lancaster Regiment. The casuals, details, &c., consisting of about 80 non-commissioned officers and men, left at Aldershot on the embarkation of the battalion for Bermuda, have proceeded to Pontefract to join the depôt.

90th Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). Sir H. Holyoake Goodricke, Bart., died suddenly on the 25th ult. He was born August 7, 1836, and entered the Army as ensign in the 90th Foot in 1854. When quite young in the service he served in the Crimea with the 90th, including the siege and fall of Sebastopol, and was severely wounded at the assault of the Redan on Sept. 8. He served also during the Indian campaign of 1857-58, and was present with Havelock's column at the relief of Lucknow and final defence of the Residency, defence of the Alumbagh under Outram, the capture of Lucknow, and the subsequent operations in Oude. He was appointed captain in 1857, became major in 1869, and retired on temporary half-pay in Oct. 1871.

95th Sherwood Foresters (Derbyshire Regiment). Lieut. Smith is a candidate for the Indian S.C., and has been appointed to the 27th Madras N.I., on probation.

98th North Staffordshire Regiment. Lieut. Webb is about to retire from the service.

102nd Royal Dublin Fusiliers. The regiment has been nearly five years in Ceylon already, and now rumour says that it is to spend another two years there. The regiment is completely broken up, and has been so all the time, having always three and a half companies on detachment, and generally a fourth at musketry as well; so that the present commanding officer, whose time expires next June, will never have seen his regiment together since he took command, five years ago. This state of perpetual dismemberment tells on the efficiency of all ranks. The regiment has lost many men by death and invaliding, the station is very unpopular with men, and desertions are numerous, the men going off in batches of four at a time (seven on one occasion) to Australia and elsewhere. On the head-quarters of the regiments this prolonged stay is particularly hard, as they are always in the hot, enervating climate of Colombo, and get no change whatever. Owing to the climate and local surroundings, the regiment has no opportunity of practising field fortifications, camping-out, route-marching, or outpost duty; and the rifle range being seven miles off, match shooting and private practice are reduced to a minimum. So that besides losing the valuable experience gained in practising these things, there is nothing but the one dull, monotonous round of barrack routine.

Rifle Brigade. Lieut.-Col. Robinson has, it is understood, been selected to succeed Lieut.-Col. E. Cunningham, Bombay S.C., as an Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. on the Bombay Presidency.

Medical Department. Surg.-Major J. Rogers takes up the appointment of Principal Medical Officer of the new Egyptian Army on Monday next. The salary attaching to the post is £1,000. Dr. Rogers will, however, still remain on the strength of the Department. He will undertake the entire reorganisation of the medical department of the new force, and will introduce the Army Hospital Corps system. We regret to learn from India of the death of Surg.-Major R. Jackson, in charge of the Medical Depôt at Pachmarhi. Dr. Jackson started after a tiger that was seen near Singhanhana at the foot of the hills. Whilst out, he was attacked by hornets, receiving nearly 200 stings. His throat and face were fearfully swollen, and erysipelas and other symptoms of blood-poisoning supervening, he succumbed on the morning of Sept. 24. A correspondent writing from Pachmarhi says:—"His death is greatly felt here, and I don't believe there ever lived a more kindly-hearted, attentive, and skilful doctor in India." Dr. Jackson had over 18 years' service, and was contemplating retirement next year.

Commissariat and Transport Staff. The drag hounds belonging to the officers of this corps, stationed at Woolwich, met for the first time last Saturday at Sidcup, the Major-General commanding the District and a large and fashionable attendance being present to witness the run, which was most successful. Assist.-Comy.-Gen. Shannon has joined at Aldershot for duty. Sir Edward Morris, K.C.B., in making his annual inspection of the various Commissariat establishments, visited Dover and Chatham last week, and commenced at Woolwich on Thursday, when he inspected Nos. 9 and 10 Companies, the barrack-rooms, books, &c.; on Friday, the supply, reserve, and barrack stores, and to-day is to see Nos. 2 and 11 Companies.

Pay Department. Major W. L. Brockman, A.P.D., will take over charge of the Department at Bermuda from Major Luke, Staff paymaster, who has completed his tour of foreign service. Major Brockman will shortly be promoted to the rank of Staff paymaster. During the current month, the following officers, who have served five years as paymasters, will attain the hon. rank of major in the Army, from the dates named:—Capts. W. B. Stoker, formerly in the 2nd West India Regt., 16 years' service, from Nov. 6; O. M. Johnson, late 98th Regt., 15 years' service, from Nov. 8; G. W. Furlong, late 21st Regt., 29 years' service, from Nov. 9; A. G. W. Hemans, late 56th Regt., 23 years' service, from Nov. 20; and A. Dening, late 20th Regt., 20 years' service, from Nov. 27. Capt. Stoker served in the Ashantee War, 1873-4 (medal); and Brevet Major Furlong served with the 21st Regt. in the Crimea, and has the medal, clasp, and Turkish medal. The following reply has been received from Lieut.-Col. Goold, late Staff paymaster, in acknowledging the receipt of an illuminated address, which it was resolved, at the annual dinner in May last, to present to him, in recognition of his services, on the formation of the Army Pay Department:—"Will you kindly convey to the officers of the Department my sincere thanks for the kind expression of their feelings, and appreciation of efforts made for the attainment of the objects in view, which I regret were not attended with better success at the time, but still hope to see more fully realised."

The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

"A Militia Field Officer" writes:—"In one of your articles you say, 'Mr. Childers conceived the idea of welding together the Line and Militia, by giving to the junior service the titles and distinctions borne by the senior;' but this is what he did not do, for the same organisation was not carried out in the Militia that was established in the Line. I refer to the promotion of some four captains in each regiment to the rank of major. Now, this had the effect of putting some 400 officers over my head, for, as major of Militia, I ranked above them; but in one day, I was suddenly placed junior to these 400 captains. It seems to me that this was a great injustice to Militia majors, and I wonder that the grievance was not well ventilated at the time; it is also the cause of great absurdity in practice, for when my regiment is out I am senior to the adjutant, who is a major, only in regimental matters, the moment anything outside that crops up, he is senior to me."

VOLUNTEERS.

16th Middlesex (London Irish Rifles). The following regimental order has been issued:—"With heartfelt sorrow the commanding officer records the decease of Col. the Marquis of Donegall, who during the period of more than 23 years had been the commandant of the London Irish Rifles, and owing to whose indefatigable zeal the regiment attained the highest state of efficiency. By the present and former members, who cheerfully contributed their valuable aid to him in his devotion to the interests of the regiment, and who knew his kind and noble heart, his loss will be deeply felt, and they will ever remember with feelings of pride and pleasure the time they served under their universally-esteemed commandant, the Marquis of Donegall. During the ensuing drill season officers in uniform will wear a piece of black crape round the left arm above the elbow."

(Where not otherwise stated, the foregoing commissions and announcements bear date November 3, and the current year must be understood.)

It is understood that an additional grant for Devonport Dockyard to cover excessive expenditure in this financial year will be made.

It is reported that some extensive alterations are in course of being executed at the Gunboat Slipway at Haslar, and that a large sum of money will be expended in converting it and the lake at its rear into a head-quarters for the torpedo boats of the Royal Navy. The Gunboat Slipway at Haslar was designed at an immense cost some 25 years since, the objects being the hauling-up, berthing, repairing, and keeping in a state of perfect equipment, ready for any emergency, this class of vessel; but for many years it has, literally speaking, been unused, the general shallowness of water, the tortuous channels, and the delays in getting the vessels under Haslar Bridge being insurmountable obstacles to a quick adoption of their services as a flotilla. With the torpedo boats, all these impediments will not have to be contended with, for these craft are, comparatively speaking, light in draught, low in hull, and easily navigated. It was suggested in these columns many years since (says the Hampshire Telegraph) that the Haslar gunboat sheds could readily be converted into a general boat-building depôt for the Royal Navy. Their adaptation to the torpedo boat service, with possibly that for the steam launches as well, comes very nearly to the idea thrown out.

THE EARTHQUAKE AT ANJER.

H.M.S. Champion, Capt. Powlett, was in the Banca Straits early in September, when she passed the English merchant steamer Bay of Naples aground on the Melville Bank, but could render no assistance, being pressed for time. The United States frigate Juniata, however, stood by the British steamer, rendering all the assistance in her power, but unsuccessfully. The merchant steamer, thanks to the exertions of her master, Mr. E. Tidmarsh, was at last successfully hove off the bank into deep water. The U.S. frigate Juniata then lent the Bay of Naples her pilot, but the unfortunate man was struck by lightning the next day, and the master of the steamer had to grope his way as best he could to Rhio. His account of the results of the recent earthquake, which took place while he was in the Straits, is interesting. He arrived at Singapore on Sept. 18, 96 days out from Penarth, of which 24 were occupied from Sunda. His narrative is as follows;—"On arrival there (on Aug. 21) ashes were teeming in torrents, so I stood south for twelve hours, then came north again, but found things getting worse. Accordingly stood south once more until weather settled. All one day it was as dark as the grave, and pumice stones and ashes were still coming down. On getting to the Straits came through a bank of ashes, and could only force the ship half a mile an hour (thus taking five hours). When once I got into clear water was all the remainder of the day sailing through dead bodies of men and women. Was two days off Anjer, which is a heap of ashes. A Dutch man-of-war informed me eight buoys were gone, and extreme caution was necessary. I stood on for Banca Straits, arriving in safety. I anchored and sent on shore for a pilot, who came on board. The same afternoon the vessel got on the Melville Bank (soft mud)." Lloyd's Agent at Anjer, Mr. Schint, also gives the following account of the terrible catastrophe at that place:—"On Sunday, Aug. 26, loud reports and detonations were heard from the direction of Krakatoa, and towards evening the sea became unusually agitated, the water assuming a colour of inky blackness. No apprehensions, however, were entertained for the safety of the town, and nothing occurred during the night. At 6 a.m. next morning Mr. Schint went down to the beach to look after the mooring of his boats, and while engaged in this work an immense wave, about 30 metres high, swept without the slightest warning over Anjer, completely ruining the place, and penetrating inland to the distance of about two miles. Mr. Schint only saved his life by jumping into one of his boats, which was close at hand. Seven of his family, however, were amongst the victims of this flood. The few survivors made their way as best they could inland, but, to add to the horrors of the scene, the atmosphere grew pitch dark, and boiling mud fell in showers. At about 10 a.m. a second wave, supposed to be higher than the first (though its height could not be estimated, owing to the darkness) again swept over the place. By this time, however, most of the survivors from the first wave had gone inland. The Coast of Java, from Maock on the north to Java's third point on the south-west, has completely changed its configuration, the sea having encroached to the distance of about half-a-mile inland. Thousands of cocoa-nut palms have been destroyed, and banyan trees 200 years old have been completely uprooted and swept away; large masses of coral, weighing 400 and 500 picols each, have been carried four miles inland, and behind Anjer a large lake of salt water has been formed. The Cape of Anjer has been split into two pieces, one half having fallen into the sea. Anjer light and lighthouse have been swept away; the river at Anjer choked up, and the conduit which used to convey fine drinking water to the place is in ruins. Mr. Schint says that in his opinion it will be impossible for many years to build a new town near the ruins of Anjer, as all the neighbourhood is a wilderness, and quite uninhabitable. He believes that if a new port of call for vessels is opened it will have to be at some distance from the site of the above town. Lights on Java Head and Flat Point are visible, and on Java's fourth point an auxiliary light of the sixth order will be visible at about two and a half German geographical miles from about Oct. 15 next. Passage through Sunda Straits, east of Krakatoa Island, is unchanged."

Lord Northbrook has become a life member of the United Service Recreation Club at Portsmouth, by forwarding to Capt. Colomb, R.N., the sum of £10, as a subscription to the funds of the society, of which that officer is chairman. Lord Northbrook inspected the grounds on his recent visit to Portsmouth, and was highly pleased with all he then saw.

The Report on the progress of the German Navy which has been prepared for presentation to the Reichstag during the approaching Session will, among other things, prove and urge the necessity of Germany increasing her ironclad fleet by several important additions, especially in torpedo boats, of which a number have been ordered from an English firm noted for the high speed of their craft. It is further intended to order a number of submarine torpedo boats from Stockholm.

Some experiments were made last week on Whale Island, Portsmouth, with a view of devising means of protection against the Nordenfelt gun. Card-board targets sandwiched between rope mantlets were subjected to attack; they were also fired at with the Martini-Henri rifle.

A decree of the Russian Minister of Marine was officially published on Oct. 21 at St. Petersburg, providing for the establishment at Vladivostock of a school for the training of ship surveyors, engineers, stokers, steersmen, and signalmen for the Siberian flotilla. A second decree directs the new ironclad in course of construction at Nicolaieff to be named Catherine II., and the two ironclads which are being built at Sebastopol, Tchesme and Sinope respectively.

This Asylum was opened in February, 1854, to provide a home for the widows of non-commissioned officers and privates of the Army of not less than 50 years of age.

There are 65 widows in the Asylum.

Each widow has a furnished room, and receives seven shillings weekly, besides a monthly allowance of two shillings and sixpence for coals.

The House is capable of containing 70 widows, and the Committee appeal to the public for funds to enable them to admit the additional number, the present subscriptions being insufficient.

The funded income of the charity yields only £930, with an additional £50 from the Princess Mary's Fund for Nurses, to meet an estimated expenditure of £3,000 per annum.

An annual subscription of half-a-guinea, or a donation of five guineas, entitles to one vote at each election, with the right of nominating a candidate.

Army & Navy Gazette.
LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1883.

THE proposal which has been made to place her Majesty's Indian troopships on the same footing as the local troopships belonging to the Indian Government, and to officer them from the same source, is one which would be acceptable to both services. Hitherto the Admiralty have always resisted any proposal to take the Indian troopships out of commission, on the ground that it would deprive them of a considerable share of patronage. The matter, however, is far too important to be decided on such interested grounds as these. As a matter of fact, service on board Indian troopships is very distasteful to Naval officers, who would gladly be relieved of the duty which they are at present required to perform. The primary object of the Indian troopships is to convey passengers to and from England and India. Troopships are not men-of-war. They are essentially passenger vessels. Naval officers hold their commissions to serve on board ships of her Majesty's Fleet, not to navigate transport-vessels between Portsmouth and Bombay. On board a troopship, a Naval officer finds himself in a somewhat derogatory position, which he naturally seeks to exalt by endeavouring to maintain the discipline and routine of a smart man-of-war. A correspondent lately wrote to us complaining that, on an Indian troopship, the portion of the deck allotted to officers and their ladies was incessantly disturbed by drills, and quarters, and parades for prayers, and inspections of the 100 and odd Blue-jackets forming the crew. As he very pertinently observed, a troopship exists for the convenience of passengers, whose comfort should be the chief object held in view, rather than the instruction of the crew in their duties. The complaints of military officers, however, go far beyond such minor causes of grievance as this. It is asserted, and, we believe, with truth, that on board an Indian troopship the Army is entirely subordinated to the Navy. The commander of the troops is a commander in name only. He does not command his men. He can neither punish nor reward them. From the time he steps on board till he again sets foot on shore, his functions are temporarily suspended. During the voyage he is little else than an ornamental cypher. He has scarcely more power than the junior lieutenant in a company of the Line. The discipline and interior economy of the troops is taken out of his hands, and transferred to the officers and warrant officers of the ship, who take over complete charge of the troops as long as they remain on board. There can be no doubt that this system is thoroughly unsound. It simply courts friction. The wonder is that it should have been allowed to continue so long. In all that appertains to the service of the ship, to its navigation, and working, and to the sea duties, the authority of the Captain should be supreme. As regards the command and discipline of the troops, their military duties, and interior economy, it seems to us that the authority of the military commander on board should be equally supreme, and should admit of no interference. It is easy to define where the authority of the naval commander ends, and where that of the military commander begins. It is so defined on board hired transports, where both the ship's master and commander of the troops have their clear and distinct rôle. We never receive complaints from military passengers embarked on hired transports, or from officers who travel in ships belonging to the Indian Government. These loudly praise the system in vogue on those vessels. We have called attention to this subject before, and we trust that something may be done in the direction indicated. Public opinion in both services demands some change. If the Admiralty continue to be obstructive, we trust that pressure may be brought to bear upon them, so that both naval and military officers may be relieved from a position which brings them together under anomalous conditions, and is the cause of much heart-burning and constant complaint.

The Duke of Connaught, immediately after joining his command at Meerut, will take a month's leave, and go on to Calcutta for the Exhibition.

We are in a position to state that the post of Governor of Malta has not been offered to Lieutenant-General Lord Chelmsford. The appointment is not made either by the Horse Guards or the War Office. It is rumoured at the service clubs that the new Governor may be found in General Sir Lintorn Simmons, R.E. We doubt it; he is too good a soldier.

We have the best reason for knowing the reports in circulation as to the dissatisfaction of H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge on the efficiency of the Artillery at Woolwich at the recent inspection, are entirely without foundation; on the contrary, the troops were pronounced to be unapproached by those of any European Power.

We learn that the deficit in the Royal Regiment of Artillery now exceeds 2,000 men, in spite of the "unexampled success" of recruiting reported by the "inspired Press," and in spite of the War Office wonderful paper localisation scheme. The deficit has been gradually growing for several years, and as this and the length of time necessary to turn out an efficient Artilleryman is well known, the apathy of the authorities on the alarming condition into which this important branch of the Army is drifting, seems to us quite inconceivable. It appears probable that the unpopularity of the Artillery with recruits is owing to the perpetual transfers that take place from brigade to brigade and battery to battery. Till the principle of breaking up the Royal Regiment is, however, recognised, it seems unlikely any change for the better can be looked for.

In view of the probable removal of three of the Line battalions now in Egypt, it may be interesting to note that the 1st Battalion, Sussex Regiment (35th), have been abroad since 1875 (the 2nd Battalion having been at Malta since 1882); the 2nd Battalion, Cornwall (46th), since 1876; the 3rd Battalion, 60th Rifles, and the Cameron Highlanders (79th), since 1879; the 1st Battalion, Gordon Highlanders (75th), 1st Battalion, West Kent (50th), and 1st Battalion, Black Watch (42nd), since 1882. The Cameron Highlanders, it may be noted, is a single battalion. The Highland Lght Infantry still retains the proud distinction of having both its battalions serving at home at the same time.

The officer commanding Royal Artillery, South-Eastern District, has issued a complimentary and well-deserved order on the loss the Royal Regiment suffers in the retirement from the service of Major Duthie, Brigade-Major, Royal Artillery, South-Eastern District. Major Duthie's retirement is, we believe, in a great measure due to the way he was treated in not being allowed to accompany his chief in Egypt, on his Staff. An accomplished scholar and a Staff-College man, he only wanted the chance of active service to bring him prominently forward; but this was denied him, on the plea that both his chief and he could not be spared from the South-Eastern District at the same time, the real reason being that the appointment was wanted for an officer who had served in the Red River Expedition, but who had not passed through the Staff College. We wonder how many really good men have been driven from the Army of late years, disgusted at the hopelessness of their prospects, in the age of favoured cliques.

The War Office still seems unable to act on any sound principle in the promotion of officers from the Colonels' List to that of Major-General. An officer is at one moment passed over—unfitness can only be the reason, it is charitable to believe—and then, some months after, promoted. This is surely not the way to give satisfaction to any one.

The number of General Officers appears now to be fast approaching the new fixed establishment. There remain to be absorbed of Generals—Cavalry and Infantry, 4; Artillery, 1; Engineers, 1. Of Lieutenant-Generals—Cavalry and Infantry, 4; Artillery, 1; Engineers, 1. Of Major-Generals—Cavalry and Infantry, 8, with two vacancies; Artillery, 2.

It will be noticed that Colonel W. W. Lynch, commanding the Shrewsbury Regimental District, has been transferred to Guildford. But what about other members of the Shrewsbury Staff who were brought prominently to notice as witnesses in the recent court-martial? An entire reconstruction of the Shrewsbury Staff and a change of system would prove beneficial. But Colonel G. N. Fendall, upon whom the command has been conferred, is a strong man, and will, there is reason to believe, use his utmost endeavours to put matters straight at Copthorne Barracks.

Brevet Major G. B. N. Martin, Royal Artillery, has been appointed Associate Member of the Ordnance Committee at the War Office for Mountain Equipment.

A correspondent asks us a question which some of our readers who have time at their disposal, and a taste for research, may feel disposed to answer. It is this. "There is a battery of Artillery designated No. 7 Battery 1st Brigade, Eastern Division, Royal Artillery. What was this battery called before Mr. Childers undertook the task of rendering the organisation of the Royal Artillery hopelessly unintelligible?" We confess that we have long since despaired of ever being able to understand the mysteries of the present Artillery organisation, or rather, let us say, *dis*organisation.

The following appointments have been made to the Royal Horse Artillery, viz.:—Major J. F. Free, to M Battery, A Brigade, at Dublin; and Lieutenant T. W. Powles, to E Battery, A Brigade, at Meerut.

A very heated controversy is being carried on in Russia with regard to the invention of M. Liatchok, which, after being refused by the Russian Minister of War, was purchased by the Germans. Under the sensational heading of "A Prussian Secret," the Moscow Gazette asserts that the secret section of the Spandau Arsenal has received orders to make a large number of the Liatchok contrivances for regulating the fire of rifles. According to the weekly Citizen, edited by Prince Metchertzki, M. Liatchok invented the apparatus at the beginning of last year. When he brought his invention before the military commission, composed of five Generals, among them being the Chief of the General Staff, one of the Generals said, "I should be glad to pay a high sum to the adversaries who would encumber themselves with a thing of this kind." Another said that it was too cumbrous and costly, a third criticised it because the frame upon which the rifles were to rest was fixed, and was surprised when the inventor pointed out that one of the chief advantages of this frame was that it was moveable. The members of the commission had evidently made up their minds to reject the invention, and they did so, without withdrawing to deliberate thereupon. M. Liatchok applied to the German Government, and at once received a telegram telling him to come to Berlin. Prince Metchertzki's review adds that one of the Generals who sat on the commission is himself engaged in making an apparatus of a similar kind, and that this apparatus, being fixed, has the very defect so unjustly attributed to that which the commission rejected.

That the Spaniards do not share the views of other nations as to the employment of veteran officers is evidenced by the appointment of the aged Marshal Concha to the important command of the Army of the North. José Gutierrez de la Concha, Marquis of Havannah, who is now in his eighty-third year, gained his General's lace as far back as the first Carlist War, and in conjunction with his late brother, Manuel Concha, who died a Field-Marshal and Marquis of Duero, has played an important part in all the civil wars which have been waged in the Peninsula since the accession of Queen Isabella to the ricketty throne of Fernando VII. Of recent years the younger Concha has not been much heard of. He was one of the best known and most efficient Governors-General of Cuba, and one of the few Spanish Generals whose connection with the Pearl of the Antilles has not been the means of amassing an ample fortune. In 1854, he took part in the O'Donnell conspiracy, and, in consequence, was banished to Majorca, and his name erased from the Army List. Another turn in the political wheel brought him, however, once more to the fore, and sent him again to Cuba as Captain-General. With the exceptions of Marshals Serrano, Duke de la Torre, and Arsenio Maximo Campos, the veteran Marquis of Havannah, whose vitality is surprising, is the most remarkable of the present leading officers of the Spanish Army. General Lopez Dominguez, the new Minister of War, will be remembered as having captured Cartagena in 1874, and as having served as Chief of the Staff to his uncle, Marshal Serrano, in the last Carlist war. He was promoted Major-General for his share in the Revolution of 1868.

The daily papers are, to say the least of it, premature in assigning the command of the Madras Division, which will be vacated next year by Lieutenant-General Payn, C.B., to Major-General Martin Dillon, for as yet no appointment has been made, and "there is many a slip," &c., especially in regard to military appointments.

The command of the Regimental District at Hounslow is about to fall vacant, Colonel H. Kent having been noted for promotion to the establishment of General Officers, to fill the next vacancy.

The two commissions from the ranks gazetted this week bring up the number conferred during the present year to thirteen, three being given in the Cavalry, three in the Coast Brigade of Artillery, and seven in the Infantry of the Line. Two of these latter have been given to serjeants in the 51st King's Own Light Infantry, and one to a serjeant of the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders (Soutar), in recognition of his gallantry at Tel-el-Kebir. As the grandson of a baronet is included in the list of promotions from the ranks, obtaining his commission within four years of his enlistment, there is hope for the many younger sons of good family who have taken the shilling with the view of rising from the lowest rung of the ladder.

By the death of Lord Congleton, Colonel H. Parnell, C.B., commanding the 2nd Battalion 3rd Buffs, becomes heir to a peerage, to which his father has succeeded. Colonel Parnell retires on half-pay at the end of the month, under the five years' rule.

Major-General George Bray has been awarded the distinguished and good-service pension. He served in the 39th Regiment as a subaltern, and afterwards in the 96th Regiment, which he commanded for seven years. General Bray served as Assistant-Adjutant-General, 2nd Division, through the Abyssinian campaign; as Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army, under General Lord Napier of Magdala. He was afterwards Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Bombay Army, until the 96th Regiment returned to England, when he was appointed Assistant-Adjutant-General of the Southern Division. General Bray might have looked forward to further advancement on the Staff, and to higher rank in the Army, as he was well up on the List of Colonels, and was a hard-working and very popular officer; but, in consequence of a severe illness, brought about in and by the performance of his Staff duties, he was obliged to relinquish his profession, and retire from the service.

Major C. E. Macaulay, Bengal Staff Corps, has been appointed Governor of the Ayr Prison, in succession to the present Governor, who is transferred to Perth, in the vacancy caused by the death of Commander Monteith, R.N. Major Macaulay has served for several years in the Punjab Commission, and is decorated for the Indian Mutiny, Chinese, and Afghan Campaigns.

Colonel Lonsdale Hale has given us a sixth edition of his little book entitled "What to observe, and how to report it." Though this useful work has been written "for the instruction of non-commissioned officers in reconnaissance," it may be read, and studied too, with advantage by officers of all ranks. The directions given as to the objects to be specially noticed, and as to the style in which reports, whether verbal or written, should be made, are remarkably clear and practical. The different kinds of military drawing, and the conventional signs by which various objects are represented, are clearly described and admirably illustrated. The list of qualifications required to constitute an efficient non-commissioned officer of cavalry for out-post duty, seems to us rather in excess of what can reasonably be expected. Considering Colonel Hale's position as a Professor at Sandhurst, his experience, and his acknowledged mastery of his subject, it is with much diffidence that we venture to express an opinion slightly at variance with his.

Audacious, Capt. Tracey, flagship of Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., would leave Hiogo for Nagasaki and Shanghai on Nov. 4. On Aug. 14 the British cruising squadron, comprising the Audacious, Vigilant, Cleopatra, Curaçoa, Daring, Albatross, Sapphire, Pegasus, and Linnet, arrived at the Korea. The squadron presented a very pretty appearance as the ships lay at anchor in this picturesque harbour. The vessels of the squadron were visited by numbers of Koreans. They were shown over the ships by the officers, who spared neither time nor trouble in entertaining their strange and inquisitive guests. The Koreans' attention was greatly struck by the use of transparent drinking vessels (i.e., tumblers), and a man who was presented with a glass (a little chipped) seemed to consider himself the recipient of a really valuable trophy. Cigars were also highly appreciated by the Koreans. On the 16th the fleet left for Port Lazareff and Vladivostock. The cruising squadron arrived at Posiette Bay on Aug. 29 from Port Lazareff; would leave on Sept. 2 for Vladivostock, Olga Bay, St. Vladimir Bay, and then to Hakodate, arriving about Oct. 1. About Oct. 6 the Daring and Linnet would part from the cruising squadron, and proceed to Hong Kong, calling at Nagasaki. The remainder of the ships will continue the cruise from Hakodate to Yokohama, arriving about the middle of October. The Zephyr was at Hakodate on Aug. 12; remains till about Sept. 12, then brings a mail to the cruising squadron. The Vigilant was at Posiette Bay on Aug. 31; leaves on Aug. 31 for Nagasaki, thence to Shanghai, to embark Sir Henry Parkes, and convey him to Tientsin. After this service, rejoins flag at Yokohama. The Foxhound was at Chefoo on Aug. 4; visiting Chefoo, Tientsin, and Newchwang in turn, and will be relieved early in September by the Kestrel, and be stationed at Shanghai. The Kestrel was at Shanghai on Aug. 11; was to visit Ningpo, and return to Shanghai by Aug. 23, and to relieve the Foxhound in the Gulf of Pechili early in September. The Espoir was at Canton on Sept. 14, and will proceed to Nagasaki and Kobé, to be stationed in Japan Division. The Swift was at Canton on Sept. 14, and on arrival of Linnet, will proceed to Singapore for service in Straits of Malacca. The Champion would leave Batavia on Sept. 17 for Singapore, and on arrival of the Swift, will proceed to Hong Kong, to prepare for paying-off.

Boadicea, Capt. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Nowell Salmon, V.C., was at Simon's Town on Oct. 31.

Canada, Capt. Durrant, has left Halifax for Boston and Bermuda. Letters received from this ship, dated Halifax, Oct. 19, mention that while at Halifax some excitement had been caused by the discovery of a considerable amount of dynamite in the possession of two men, with the necessary mechanism for exploding it, and in their rooms when arrested were found two Boyton dresses, with which the apparatus could be conveyed alongside a vessel in the dark, and left to explode. Extra precautions were immediately taken on board the Canada, boats being ordered away from the ship at sundown, while a guard rowed round the vessel all night. The officers entertain no doubt that mischief was intended, but the men were caught in time. The loyalty of the Canadians is conspicuous. A seaman of the Canada, drinking in a bar on shore at Montreal, heard from a man of Fenian proclivities some disparaging remarks upon Royalty, and immediately knocked him through a plate-glass window. The bystanders not only cheered him, but subscribed on the spot enough to pay for the glass, and to give Jack a balance of $6. Partly in consequence of the dynamite incident, the route of the Canada had been changed. Instead of remaining at Halifax three weeks, as originally intended, they were to leave on Oct. 22 for Boston, and after three days to sail for Bermuda, staying there some weeks prior to departure for the West India Islands. The weather at Halifax was setting in cold.

Champion, Acting Capt. W. Collins, was at Batavia on Sept. 14, when a correspondent writes to say that Acting Capt. Collins, who joined the Champion on Aug. 27 from the Swift, had become most popular on board among all ranks:—"On Aug. 28 we sailed for Penang, and arrived there on Sept. 2. On our arrival we received an order from the Admiralty to proceed to the scene of the earthquake in the Straits of Sunda, to ascertain damage done. We started at daybreak on the 3rd, and arrived at Batavia on the 8th, leaving again next day. We found the town of Anjer completely submerged, and the town of Bantam nearly so. Buoys are placed off Anjer to mark the site of the town and the end of the submarine cable. The island of Sornypan is split into five, and the volcano of Krakatow into sixteen pieces. The volcanoes are still in action. The Bezee Channel is completely blocked for shipping. The shore on both sides of the Straits is covered with ashes and pumice-stone. After sounding through and across the Straits, we returned here on the 13th, and leave on the 17th for Singapore. The Fly is at Bangkok, in consequence of there being a disturbance there. The Magpie is to completely survey the Straits of Sunda, to correct existing charts. We are anxiously awaiting some news of our relief crew setting out."

Comus, Capt. East, left Coquimbo for England on Oct. 28, on being relieved by the Satellite that day. The Constance, at Callao, would leave on Sept. 20, for Lomas, Chala, and Islay, returning to Callao about Oct. 14. The Kingfisher, at Coquimbo, would shortly visit consular ports in Chili and Peru.

Cruiser, Com. Darwin, arrived at Algiers on Oct. 27, and would leave for Malta on Oct. 29.

Decoy, Lieut.-Com. H. C. Bigge, arrived at Gibraltar on Oct. 28 from Malta.

Defence, Capt. E. J. Pollard, was, on Friday, the 26th ult., inspected by Rear-Admiral Sir A. Hoskins, when Capt. Pollard was highly complimented on the complete efficiency of the ship, on her thorough cleanliness, and on the smartness of the ship's company.

Dido, Capt. Vander-Meulen, left Jamaica on Sept. 29 for Port-au-Prince; she will return to Jamaica when no longer required.

Fantôme, Com. Grey, was at Jacmel on Oct. 9.

Inflexible, Capt. Seymour, arrived at Malta from Corfu on Oct. 29.

Iris, Capt. Rice, has gone from Alexandria to Port Said, where she will await the arrival of the Duke of Connaught.

Kingfisher, Com. Reginald Thornton, commissioned at Sheerness on Aug. 17, 1880, for service in the Pacific, is ordered to be recommissioned for a further term of service on that station. A new crew will leave England for Colon in the Wye, store and troopship, at an early date, the Kingfisher proceeding to Panama to exchange crews.

Lord Warden, Capt. Kennedy, left Kirkwall on Tuesday, on her return cruise along the east coast of Scotland. An examination by divers shows that her tender has sustained no further injury than scratches on her bilges by being ashore during Thursday's gale. No boys were induced to join the Navy at the Shetland Isles.

Mallard, Lieut. and Com. Littledale, was at Port Royal, Jamaica, making good defects, on Oct. 9.

Minotaur, Capt. Fellowes, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell, K.C.B., with the Sultan and Neptune in company, arrived at Portsmouth on Oct. 27, to dock and give leave.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir John Commerell, V.C., was at Halifax on Oct. 19, and remains for the present. The Tenedos was at Halifax, refitting, and when ready will proceed to Bermuda. The Canada was at Halifax, and would proceed to Bermuda about Oct. 20, visiting Boston on her way; after a slight refit at Bermuda, will proceed to Barbados as senior officer's ship. The Garnet was at Halifax, and will proceed to Bermuda early in November. The Dido was on the Jamaica Division, visiting Haitian ports. The Griffon was at Halifax on Oct. 18, visiting northern ports. The Flamingo was at Halifax, and would proceed to Bermuda on Oct. 25. The Fantôme was at Jamaica on Sept. 25, for general service on the division; is to be relieved by the Foam, and will then proceed to Bermuda. The Mallard was at Jamaica on Sept. 25, for general service on the division. The Foam was at Halifax; after completing refit, about Oct. 31, would proceed to relieve the Fantôme on the Jamaica Division.

Orontes, Capt. Andre, arrived at Simon's Town on Oct. 29.

Philomel, Com. B. Lang, has been shelling the camp of the besiegers of Muscat. The Times says:—"The affairs of Oman, of which Muscat is the capital, have on several occasions within the last 30 years been in such a disturbed state as to necessitate the active interference of the Indian Government, and the origin of the evil is to be found in that common Oriental malady, a large family and a disputed succession. When Seyyid Said died, in 1856, after a reign of more than 50 years, his vast dominions both in Africa and Arabia—for Zanzibar as well as Oman owned his sway—were divided among the elder of his fifteen sons. None were satisfied with their parts, for each thought to enjoy the whole; but in 1862, by the counsel of the Indian Government, Thoweynee, the eldest son, was installed at Muscat, with the right to receive tribute from his brother in Zanzibar. In 1866 he was murdered by his own son Selim, who, as there was no clear proof of his guilt, was recognised as Imam by the Government of India. One year later Selim was himself defeated by a neighbouring chief and deposed. The victor caused himself to be proclaimed ruler of Oman, and for a few months there was tranquillity. In 1870, however, Seyyid Toorki, another of the sons of the old ruler Said, arrived on the coast from Bombay with a resolve to make his bid for power. For a short time the result seemed doubtful, but in July, 1871, Toorki was in possession of Muscat, and his authority was recognised by us in the next month. He has been exposed to many perils since that time, but, with the countenance of the English Resident, he has managed to hold his own against his brethren as well as his neighbours. The chief prop of his power has been the mercenary force of Belooches whom he attracted into his service from the opposite coast of Mekran. These men care and know nothing about Oman politics; so long as they are paid they ask no questions, and they make excellent fighters, as Ferrier long ago pointed out. But the Arab soldiers are not to be depended on, and it has long been evident that, if they ever found a ruler more agreeable to them than Seyyid Toorki, they would abandon the latter without the least compunction. On several occasions it has been clear that they would have sided with Toorki's Wahabi enemies at Nejed, or with, what is very much the same thing, the Bedouin plunderers of the Desert, but for the presence of the English gunboat, never absent from the bay. The town of Muscat is wealthy and prosperous. The population exceeds 40,000. The town is surrounded by a wall, and the entrance to the harbour is defended by two forts, Mirani and Jalali. The trade shows a surplus of exports over imports of about three-quarters of a million sterling. Seyyid Toorki is now exposed to the danger of a brother's ambition, just as the same peril beset his predecessors at a former period, and, as the assailants of his city have withstood the fire of the English gunboat during four days, the attack must be considered of a more serious character than those which have preceded it. The Arabs of the Desert require very little encouragement to combine for the plunder of so rich a prey as Muscat is in their eyes, and we must hope that the next news from the spot will be that the shells of our gunboat have not lost their old persuasive force." As we go to press, news reaches us from Bombay that the shelling of the besiegers' camp by the Philomel had put to flight the forces of the brother of Toorki.

Sphinx, Com. Crawford Caffin, was taken out of the basin at Sheerness to receive ammunition on Oct. 27. The Sphinx will immediately leave Sheerness for the Persian Gulf, having satisfactorily completed her machinery trials, and been officially inspected by Capt. Poland, of the Duncan.

Superb, Capt. Ward, C.B., arrived at Malta on Oct. 23 from Phalerum Bay, and disembarked 29 patients from the fleet for hospital treatment. The Superb will prepare to pay off.

Swinger, Lieut. and Com. Marx, left Plymouth for the Australian station on Oct. 30.

Triton, Staff Com. Tizard, which recently returned to Sheerness from the coast of Scotland, has received orders to proceed to Chatham, to be placed in the First Division of the Medway Steam Reserve during the winter months. The crew of the vessel, with the exception of a few ship-keepers, will return to the Royal Naval Barracks, Sheerness. The Triton started on surveying duties in April last, and has performed a considerable amount of work during the present summer. She has surveyed the entrances to the Thames and Medway, and new charts, showing the position of the sands and the various depths of water, have been prepared. The Triton has also been extensively employed on the coasts of Scotland, and soundings have been taken in the vicinity of the Orkney and Shetland Islands. She will resume her duties next spring.

Undine, Lieut. and Com. Cutfield, is reported by the French man-of-war Beautemps Beaupré to have been safely at anchor at Tamatave, on Oct. 26.

Five experienced ship's corporals have sailed for Australia to join the Nelson, flagship on that station, as extra complement, to endeavour to put a stop to the large number of desertions which are continually taking place. These men will go on shore whenever general leave is given to the ship's company, and it is believed that the assistance of such good ship's police will act as a check to the desertions which are making great inroads in our supply of seamen.

An influential memorial is being signed at Portsmouth for presentation to the First Lord of the Admiralty, asking him to revise the proceedings of a recent court-martial, which sentenced a seaman named Endersby, of the Assistance, to five years' penal servitude. Endersby went ashore at Woolwich without leave to visit his sick wife, and was met at the Arsenal gates by a ship's corporal, whom he afterwards struck on board. The man had always borne a good character, and a strong feeling prevails that the sentence, under all the circumstances, was very severe.

Epps's Cocoa.—Grateful and Comforting.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"James Epps and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

H.M.S. EXCELLENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I happened to be at Portsmouth, when the attention of the Admiralty was first called to the treatment of officers on board the Excellent, and I was not much surprised to hear that the officer who raised the question had been placed on half-pay. But what did astonish me was the fact that their Lordships should not only tolerate, but actually support so flagrant a misreading of their own Instructions as this much discussed letter brought to their notice. I can only account for it by supposing that the general opinion expressed at the time was a correct one, that the privileged and confidential remarks of the then Port Admiral (Ryder) were strongly biassed, and that the Admiralty were unwilling to introduce the necessary reforms, in the face of his undisguised hostility. Be that as it may, it seems incredible that no change has since been effected, and suddenly the public is scandalised to learn that the efficiency of Naval Lieutenants as a body is threatened by the richly deserved unpopularity of the Excellent as a gunnery establishment. It does not say much for the wise exercise of their Lordships' "absolutely despotic power," that they should have connived at the continuance of the system, and by allowing it to exist for eighteen months after it was brought to their notice, rendered possible the undesirable publicity the matter has now attained.—I am, &c.,

FIAT JUSTITIA, RUAT EXCELLENTIA.

The Admiralty have given directions for another powerful steel-armoured vessel to be immediately commenced at Chatham Dockyard. The new ship will be built in the dock in which the Warspite is now under construction, and her keel will be laid as soon as the latter vessel is launched.

Capt. Burney, of Greenwich Hospital School, arrived at Devonport on Saturday to confer with the authorities as to a scheme for one institution of the Greenwich scholars in various trades at the Keyham Naval Factories.

An ironclad intended to reinforce the American squadron upon the Pacific coast has just been launched at Vallejo, in California. This new vessel is named the Monadnock, after a monitor which was built at Boston in 1862, sent to the Pacific in 1865, and is now laid up in the arsenal of Mare Island, at San Francisco. When, in 1875, the Minister of Marine resolved to construct a new Monadnock, it was decided to try and utilise the materials of the old vessel, but this was found to be impossible. The new Monadnock has already cost upwards of £100,000, and before her armament has been completed, double that amount will have been spent upon her. The Monadnock is 263½ ft. long, 55½ ft. broad, and 14½ ft. deep. The plates are compound, having 7 in. thickness of iron and 2 in. of steel, are laid upon deal 2 ft. thick. The ship will have two turrets, protected by plates 10½ in. thick, and they will have four 10-in. steel breech-loading guns, and firing shot weighing 460 lb. The Monadnock is of 1,276 tons capacity, with a displacement of 3,815 tons.

Capt. Charles G. F. Knowles, of the Valiant, District Captain at Limerick, is at present on a tour of inspection of Coastguard stations in the Guidore, Killybegs, Sligo, Pullendiva, and Ballycastle division of the Coastguard. His progress along the coast, on board the tender Imogene, has been frequently interrupted and delayed by the violence of the weather.

The Admiralty have under consideration the amalgamation of the engineer students' establishments at Devonport and Portsmouth, but it is not yet decided which shall be abandoned. On behalf of Devonport it is urged that the building is new and fitted with every modern appliance for its present purpose, and that there is no other use to which the building could be put. For Portsmouth, it is stated that the accommodation at Devonport would not be sufficient unless the buildings were added to extensively.

On Monday evening last, some of the Naval officers belonging to the ships at Plymouth gave a large dance in the ball-room of the Royal Hotel, Devonport, to a number of their friends in the neighbourhood, in recognition of hospitalities received.

A number of German and foreign officers have been invited to Buckau, near Magdeburg, to witness a series of interesting experiments with German artillery against German armour-plating. The gun employed is one of Krupp's heaviest calibres, the tube being more than 25 feet in length and weighing over 50 tons, while the bore is 30½ centimètres. The shot used in the experiment stands over a yard high, and weighs half a ton. It is solid and conical, tapering to a very sharp point, the material consisting of Krupp's hardened steel. The charge of powder weighs 2½ cwt. The plates employed in the construction of the turret are of chilled iron, one mètre in thickness, and of a hardness equal to that of the finest and hardest steel. At the fourth round, the gun completely shattered the chilled iron plate.

London Amusements.

A special programme was arranged for the COVENT GARDEN Promenade Concerts on Monday night, when Mr. Sims Reeves sang Hatton's "Good-bye, Sweetheart, Good-bye," and Davy's "Bay of Biscay." Mr. Santley sang the famous old song of "The Vicar of Bray," and with Mr. Sims Reeves Braham's duet, "All's Well;" while Madame Lemmens Sherrington and Miss Damian added to the list of vocal attractions Claribel's "Come back to Erin" and Haydn's "Spirit Song." The attendance was large and the applause enthusiastic.

At the LYCEUM THEATRE, Miss Mary Anderson has appeared as Pauline in the "Lady of Lyons," and strengthened the favourable impression produced by her performance of Parthenia. It has become the fashion to sneer at what is called the tawdry sentimentality of Bulwer's play, written forty-five years ago for Macready and Miss Helen Faucit, but few dramatic works brought out since that period have kept such a firm hold of the stage. Miss Anderson has beauty of face, symmetry of figure, and grace, power, and tenderness of expression. Her only deficiency appears to be a command of pathos. The stirring situation in the fourth act was admirably rendered, and throughout the performance the frequent plaudits of a full and fashionable audience attested the very favourable impression produced. Mr. Barnes was a more robust representative of Claude than we have been accustomed to witness, but his declamation was no less vigorous than effective. Mrs. Billington's Widow Melnotte, Mrs. Arthur Stirling's Madame Deschappelles, Mr. William Farren's Colonel Damas, and Mr. W. H. Stephens's Deschappelles were noteworthy in a cast which also included Mr. Archer as Beauseant, Mr. Rosier as Glavis, and Mr. J. Anderson as Gaspard. The house has been crowded during the week.

The COMEDY THEATRE has been fortunate in finding so worthy a successor of the long-lived "Rip Van Winkle" as is furnished by Mr. H. B. Farnie's English version of "Le Droit d'Aînesse," successfully produced on Monday night, under the title of "Falka." The music, composed by François Chassaigne, is sufficiently sparkling, if not strikingly original. The change of a suit of clothes is the main incident of the plot, and the misapprehensions arising in consequence have all the drollery of the old French romances. Miss Violet Cameron is the heroine, whose name is identified with the title of the comic opera, and her songs, delightfully rendered, form the chief attraction of the novelty. Miss Wadman as a gipsy maiden, and Miss Louisa Henschel, Miss Vere Carew, and Miss Emily Nicholls, in less prominent parts, afford valuable assistance. The humour of Mr. Ashley as the Governor's nephew, the volatile acting of Mr. Louis Kelleher as Falka's lover, and the quaint comicality of Mr. Harry Paulton as the swaggering military chief, General Falbach, excite abundant merriment. The gipsy chief, as represented by Mr. Hamilton, and the oddity of Mr. Penley's impersonation of the seneschal of the convent, add to the completeness of a very satisfactory performance.

A new one-act play for Miss Mary Anderson is being written by Mr. W. S. Gilbert, to be produced at the LYCEUM in December, when a revival of "Pygmalion and Galatea" may be expected. Miss Anderson's engagement is prolonged till late in the spring.

"The Golden Ring" is the title of the new spectacular opera, written by Mr. George R. Sims and composed by Mr. Frederick Clay, with which the reconstructed ALHAMBRA will be opened this month.

Captain Evatt Acklom has been giving illustrated dramatic recitals at the STEINWAY HALL, Portman Square, with the assistance of Miss Henden Ward, Miss Helen Meason, and Madame Liebhart as vocalists. The recitations have comprised the "Christmas Carol," "Enoch Arden," and "Gray's Elegy."

At the STANDARD THEATRE, the sensational drama of "Glad Tidings" has now passed its 60th representation, a run quite unprecedented at this establishment. Mr. R. C. Lyons now takes the place of Mr. Arthur Dacre.

Mr. J. H. Ellis, Chief Inspector of Machinery at Portsmouth, who will be retired by age in January, will be succeeded by Mr. F. C. Alton, Chief Inspector at Bermuda; and Mr. F. H. Hodd, Chief Inspector of Machinery at Chatham, will be succeeded next month by Mr. James Roffey, C.B., late Inspector with the Mediterranean Fleet.

SPECTACLES v. BLINDNESS.—Imperfectly adapted Spectacles are the cause of most cases of blindness and defective vision. Mr. H. LAURANCE, F.S.S., Oculist Optician, 1A Old Bond Street (late 39), has made the adaptation of spectacles his especial and sole study for upwards of thirty years. Obituary.

Col. R. K. Macquoid, Madras S.C., died on the 27th ult., at Freiburg, in Baden, in his 53rd year. Col. Macquoid, who was for some time Commandant of the 3rd Infantry Hyderabad Contingent, and late of the 13th Madras N.I., entered the Army in 1847, and became a lieut. in 1853. He was employed against the mutineers in Bengal, and was present at the siege and capture of Rathgur, and took part in the battle of Bowdia and the relief of Saugor. He was also engaged in the siege and capture of Gurra Cotah, the action of Zalimpoor, the siege and capture of Jhansi, the battles of the Betwah and Koonch, the siege and capture of Calpee, and other minor affairs. He attained the rank of Lieut-Col. in 1873, and obtained his Brevet-Colonelcy in 1878.

Sir James Alexander Dunbar, of Brath, Nairnshire, a retired commander in the Royal Navy, died at Brath House on the 7th ult., after a very brief illness, much to the regret of a large circle of friends and acquaintances. The deceased baronet served for a good many years afloat on the coast of Africa and elsewhere. Sir James joined the Navy on June 6, 1834. He was deputy-lieutenant for Nairn.

KRUPP v. WOOLWICH.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of Oct. 27, 1883, p. 814, col. 1, there appears the following paragraph:—"Need we add that the Krupp gun was found to be immeasurably superior to the English 'modified French' system." This paragraph is absolutely untrue, in every respect it is misleading, malicious, and can have been written for no good purpose. On the occasion referred to, the Krupp gun, which, by the way, is an old 1873-pattern one, belonging to the Egyptians, gave, with 23 deg. of elevation, a range of 6,400 yards (about), as the marking was very rough. On the same occasion, the British B.L. was fired with 10 deg. elevation, and gave a range of 6,100 yards. If the old-pattern Krupp took 20 deg. of elevation to get a range of 6,400 yards, and the British gun only takes 10 deg. 50 min. elevation to get the same range, I should think the boot was on the other leg. What do you think, Mr. Editor?—I am, &c.,

OROIDE GOLD JEWELLERY (REGD.)

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
Accurate timekeepers, 21s to 50s, safe and free per post (registered).
The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, AND CO.'S NEW MILITARY BOOKS.

MILITARY HANDBOOKS, EDITED BY COLONEL C. B. BRACKENBURY.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 7s 6d.

The ELEMENTS of MILITARY ADMINISTRATION. First Part. Permanent System of Administration. By Major J. W. BUXTON, Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers, Garrison Instructor, Northern District.

"A double purpose is served by the publication of this volume. In the first place, it describes the existing system of administration, and in the second place, it suggests another system......For the first time, therefore, Colonel Brackenbury assures his readers, a comprehensive book, giving the chief details of English military administration, has been published." —Broad Arrow.

Small crown 8vo, cloth, 4s 6d.

MILITARY LAW: its Procedure and Practice. By Major Sisson C. Pratt, R.A., Author of "Field Artillery," &c.

Recommended Officially to the Royal Artillery, as containing much valuable matter.—R.O. 57, of 1883.

FIELD ARTILLERY: its Equipment, Organisation, and Tactics. By Major Sisson C. PRATT, R.A. With 12 Plates, small 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"Some excellent illustrations and plans serve to elucidate the writer's remarks, and a most successful effort has been made to produce a really useful and fairly exhaustive manual on a subject which, though of the greatest importance, seldom meets with the attention it deserves."—Times.

"The 'Military Handbooks,' edited by Colonel C. B. Brackenbury, have received a valuable addition in a work on 'Field Artillery,' by Major Pratt, R.A. Colonel Brackenbury could scarcely have made a more judicious choice for such a treatise. The beginning and end of the volume deal with the subject of artillery in a specially technical manner, the central portion being of almost equal interest and importance to officers of all arms."—Army and Navy Gazette.

MILITARY SKETCHING and RECONNAISSANCE. By Colonel F. J. HUTCHISON and Major H. G. MACGREGOR. Fourth Edition, with 15 Plates, small crown 8vo, cloth, 4s.

MINOR TACTICS. By Lieutenant-Colonel C. Clery, Assistant-Adjutant-General, late Professor of Tactics, Royal Military College, Sandhurst. With 26 Maps and Plans, crown 8vo, cloth, price 9s.

"There is no officer, of whatever rank or service, who will not be benefited by a careful perusal of 'Minor Tactics.'"—United Service Gazette.

Small crown 8vo, cloth limp, 2s.

A SYSTEM of FIELD TRAINING. By Major C. K. BROOKE, the East Yorkshire Regiment.

"A very carefully thought out treatise on a subject of great importance. No soldier can read it without profit, for the author is evidently an officer of much practical experience......Most of his suggestions are very valuable."—United Service Gazette.

Sewed, price 2s 6d.

MILITARY TRIBUNALS. By Lieutenant-Colonel C. F. COLVILE.

"The notes which Colonel Colvile has been induced to publish are simply an explanation of the Army Act, and are strung together in such a manner as to render them specially valuable to those who are pursuing a course of study unaided by a crammer, as they put all the intricacies of the Act forward in a concise form, and show at once the application of it under all circumstances."—Army and Navy Gazette.

THE Report of the Army Medical Department, for the year 1881, has just been issued. No reason is given for this volume being so much later in making its appearance than the periodical Reports of other Departments, because, we presume, no satisfactory reason can be given. There is nothing on the cover, in the title-page, or in the introductory letter from the Director-General to the Secretary of State for War, to show that the book did not appear in January last, instead of nearly a year later. The Director-General's letter, with a vagueness uncommon, if not quite exceptional, in official correspondence, is dated simply "1883." Whatever advantages may have been gained by the prolonged incubation, must be more than counterbalanced by the loss of interest caused by the staleness of the information afforded. While we long for trustworthy statistics and carefully-matured opinions about the health and physical efficiency of our soldiers, in so far as both may have been effected by recent changes, we are put off with statements which would have been very interesting nearly two years ago, but which seem "flat, stale, and unprofitable" now.

From the "statistical report" of the troops at home and abroad, we learn that the admissions to hospital, the amount of sickness, and the deaths, were, in 1881, above the average of the previous ten years. The statistics of those complaints to which the Contagious Diseases Act relates show a terrible amount of illness and consequent inefficiency. When we consider, in addition, the probable amount of injury inflicted on the innocent and the unborn, the figures put before us are positively appalling. The difference in the proportional numbers of cases between the stations, "under the Act" and those exempted from its operation, is so marked as to be an answer to any reasonable objector; though, we fear, it will make little impression on fanatical opponents. But the full benefit of the operation of the Act is not evident from a comparison of the figures given for the two classes of stations; for the frequent movements of regiments have a tendency to equalise the proportions of cases, for reasons into which it is unnecessary to enter. The report on the Recruiting of the Army tells us that of 47,444 who were examined, 20,522, or nearly half, were rejected. Tabular statements of the ages, heights, and weights of all the recruits examined are given, without distinguishing those who passed from the rejected ones. From these tables we find that 8,921 were boys and lads under 19, that 12,904 were under 5 feet 5, and that 6,321 were under 8 stone 8; but we have no means of discovering how many of these stalwart fellows were passed as fit to fill (?) the ranks of our fighting line. The differences in the ratios of sickness and death in the various commands at home and abroad, for 1881 as compared with former years, have lost most of their interest with the lapse of time.

At page 204, the Report takes a new departure, and, dropping the two-year-old statistics, gives us the "medical history of the war in Egypt in 1882," by Sir J. A. Hanbury, K.C.B., the Principal Medical Officer. First, the arrangements of the various hospitals, and the disposition of the 163 medical officers and 30 nurses, and of the Army Hospital Corps, are clearly and fully detailed. Next come the "Instructions from the Director-General." These are, as might be expected from the character and experience of that officer, minute, explicit, and eminently practical. We must notice, however, at the risk of seeming hypercritical, that in enjoining the utmost freedom in the matter of dress on the line of march, he says, "The free play of the heart and lungs is a great preventative against sunstroke." The word "preventive" is sometimes called and written "preventative" by mistake, but we did not expect to see it in so careful a composition. Sir J. Hanbury gives a very complete account of the occurrences during the advance to Cairo, and for some time after hostilities had ceased. His report, supplemented as it is by others composed with equal care by Deputy Surgeon-General Marston, Brigade Surgeon Barnett, C.I.E., and Surgeons-Major Warren and Harvey, may be read with much interest and advantage by officers not connected with the medical profession, and will be invaluable for the guidance of medical officers in future expeditions. Surgeon-General Marston seems fond of introducing "specificity," a word which we never saw before, and do not want to see again. After the reports from Egypt, we have an account of the cases of wounds and injuries treated at Netley, written by Surgeon-General Longmore, with his usual clearness and ability. Several reports on the treatment of fevers and other diseases, at Netley and at some foreign stations, follow. The Report then unaccountably goes back to 1881, giving us tabular statements of meteorological observations for that year, and then an elaborate rearrangement of the statistics of contagious diseases, which were shown before in another form. It appears that Sir Garnet Wolseley was at first decidedly opposed to sending invalids from Egypt to Cyprus, on the ground that the latter place was as unhealthy as Egypt, but that his objections were afterwards removed. According to the tables in the Report, Cyprus was our healthiest station, at home or abroad, in 1881. There is one circumstance mentioned in Brigade-Surgeon Barnett's narrative that calls for special notice. On October 8, when he was in charge of the Citadel Hospital at Cairo, Sir Garnet Wolseley visited the hospital between 5 and 6 o'clock. "On this occasion he expressed his strong disapproval of its condition, more especially with reference to the want of a sufficient number of bedsteads, fly-whisks, and mosquito nets. On that day there were 300 patients in the hospital and 270 bedsteads; every serious case was provided with a mosquito net. This hospital fulfilled, in my opinion, in every respect the requirements of the sick; moreover, the Surgeon-General visited the hospital on the morning of October 8, and expressed his entire approval of its condition and arrangements, and I can confidently state that from the date I assumed charge, every possible effort was made to complete it in every detail." The discrepancy between the statements of Sir Garnet Wolseley on this subject and those of Brigade-Surgeon Barnett is complete and irreconcileable. The Report which we have been considering is by no means free from clerical and typographical errors, and we have come across some figures which, like Dora's in "David Copperfield," "won't add." The arrangement of its several parts, too, is not as regular as it might be. For these defects, undue haste in its preparation certainly cannot be pleaded as an excuse. Remarkable tact is shown in avoiding unpleasant subjects of controversy, wherever such avoidance is possible. The unification of the Medical Department, with its disputed advantages and its indisputable faults, is never mentioned, and the assumption of the duties usually restricted to the purely combatant officers by those of the Medical service, is not once alluded to.

THE Annual General Return of the Army for the year 1882 consists of 127 pages, containing 116 tables, affording a vast amount of information with reference to every branch of the Army and Reserve Forces. It is, of course, impossible to give a complete digest of the Return; but while conveying an idea of its contents, there are a few points of favourable augury, and also, unfortunately, of the reverse, to which we would wish to draw attention. Table 7 shows the "Average Strength of the Army in England, Scotland, Ireland, and Abroad, in each year from 1863 to 1882." From this, it appears that there has been an almost continuous decline, year by year, in the total strength of the Army since 1863. The average for that year was 219,606, while the average for 1881 was 188,798. In 1882, it would appear as though things had taken a turn for the better, as the average for that year is stated as 189,229. This, no doubt, is a perfectly correct calculation, as far as it goes, but it must be remembered that, during the last four months of the year, the average was swelled by the addition to the Army of the 10,000 men of the Reserve called out to fill up the battalions required for service in Egypt. Deducting this number from the strength of the Army as shown for the last four months in the year, in Table 1, and then taking the average for the year, it will be found to be reduced to 185,503. This is the lowest average strength for any year during the last twenty years, and shows a falling-off from the numbers in 1881 of 3,295. Comment on this is almost superfluous. But we cannot refrain from calling attention to the fact that, if some steps are not taken at once to remedy the evil, and to prevent a further reduction of the strength of the Army by another 34,103 during the next twenty years, that being the extent of the decline since 1863, the result will be little short of a national calamity. The above deductions are fully borne out by reference to the Recruiting Tables, from which it will be seen that the number of recruits who joined the Army in 1882 was 23,802 only, this being the lowest number since 1875, and showing a decrease of 5,568 on the number enlisted in 1876, which was 29,370; but since that time the numbers have decreased yearly. Moreover, the bad quality of the men who offer themselves for enlistment may be gathered from Table 23, which shows that out of 45,385 men who presented themselves for enlistment in 1882, it was only possible to finally approve of 23,555. In connection with this part of the Return there is one point which gives some ground for congratulation, and that is with reference to the decrease in the number of desertions. In 1882 the number was 4,145, which is the lowest number for any year since 1870, the year 1872 having been the worst, during the twenty years given, with as many as 5,861. Another favourable point is the decrease shown in the number of courts-martial held during 1882, the number of which, 14,038, is the lowest of the last six years, and 2,485 less than in 1881. The per-centage of men tried by courts-martial to the average strength of the Army for several years is also given, 1882 coming out best during the last eight years. Another proof of the improvement in the character of the Army is the fact that on January 1, 1883, there were 49,203 men wearing good-conduct badges, an increase of 4,481 over the number on January 1, 1882, which also had been the highest number for any year since 1870. Perhaps the worst feature of the whole Return are the tables which relate to the Cavalry. With a total establishment of nearly 17,000 men, exclusive of officers, and an actual strength of over 16,000 men, the establishment of horses is given as 12,393. This state of affairs in itself is bad enough, but has become familiar to us as one of the peculiarities of our system. When, however, we find that the number of horses actually in the Army on January 1, 1883, was 10,481—nearly 2,000 below the establishment—to mount 16,200 men, it becomes absolutely ludicrous. Of the Auxiliary Forces, the Militia, which during the last twenty years, though there have been great fluctuations, has on the whole increased in numbers, in 1882 shows a decrease of nearly 9,000 as compared with the numbers in 1881, and of nearly 12,000 as compared with those in 1880. The continuous decrease in the numbers of the Yeomanry is, we regret to say, still maintained; the figures having declined from 14,982 of all ranks in 1870, to 11,173 in 1882, being a reduction of 3,809 in twelve years, without any sign of a probable recovery. At this rate of decline, unless the authorities think it worth their while to hold out some real and appreciable encouragement to this force, another thirty years will see the practical extinction of a body of men who should, in time of need, have formed a most useful addition to the already far from adequate force of Cavalry belonging to the Regular Army. Lastly, but with pleasure, we refer to the table showing the steady progress of the Volunteer Force since 1863. In that year, the number of enrolled Volunteers was 162,935, and in 1882 this had risen to 207,336. Although this number is about 1,000 less than the number of enrolled men in 1881, last year still carries off the palm, by having "present at inspection" no less than 175,878, which is higher than 1881 by 227. The progress of the Volunteer movement is, to our mind, a most encouraging feature, because it shows that, however difficult it may be to obtain recruits for the Regular Army, as at present administered, the military spirit of the country is not dead; but that, on the contrary, young men holding respectable positions in life are willing to give up much of their spare time to the tedious processes of drill and discipline, in order to qualify themselves, in case of emergency, for the defence of their country. And we believe we are perfectly right in drawing from these facts the conclusion that if the Government will only hold out reasonable inducements, the ranks of the Regular Army will be speedily filled with men willing to make soldiering a profession, if only it can be followed with honour to themselves, and some reasonable prospect of a provision in after-life.

THE competition between the gun and the armour-plate is as great at this day as it was eleven years ago, when the English Government entered upon the Glatton trial. At that time, the excellence of the Cammell plates protecting the turrets of the Glatton was the wonder of the world. Recent experiments have proved that, in point of hardness, the new Cammell compound plate (Wilson's patent) is superior to Schneider steel, or any other description of armour. The trial of the armour-plate fixed to the fort at Shoeburyness conclusively demonstrated the value of the compound system, and also proved the necessity of hard backing for this class of armour. Such, at least, is the conclusion arrived at by the Engineer, whose opinion on questions of this kind is at all times deserving of the most serious consideration. The plate used at Shoeburyness was 12 in. thick. The projectile used was a Palliser shot, weighing over 1,700 lb., the striking velocity being somewhat under 1,600 ft. The shot broke up, its head remaining fixed in the plate, which was bent and bulged, the bulge and shot being pressed unusually flat against the solid granite masonry supporting the plate. There were annular rents immediately round the shot, where much violent work must have been done. The radial cracks were all very fine, and the deepest rent did not enter the plate more than 9 in., except where the point of the shot protruded. The bolts stood well, and had to be broken off to enable the Committee to examine the masonry at the back of the plate, which was found to be nearly intact, the indentation and cracking made by the blow being very slight. These results took our contemporary the Engineer by surprise. They were little expected. Indeed, our contemporary expected the very reverse would happen to what actually occurred. This will be seen from the following extract, taken from the able article which appeared at the time in the Engineer. Writing anent the force of the blow, its results, and the conclusions to be drawn therefrom, our contemporary says:—

> "We may say that about 30,000 foot-tons work have been delivered on this shield, and that a compound 12-in. plate has, under the conditions before us, borne the blow of a shot capable of perforating about 25 in. of iron. The plate is an admirable one. We stated in our previous article that we expected the shot and plate to suffer more and the masonry to be less penetrated in the case of the steel-faced plate than in the case of the iron; but we confess we did not expect to see the plate stop the shot altogether, as it has done in this instance. How is this to be accounted for? The natural suggestions are inferiority in shot, special excellence in plate, or special support given to this nature of plate by hard backing. There does not appear to be any reason to call the shot bad. The plate is certainly excellent, but we think that the last-named cause told most,—that is to say, that very hard backing specially brings out the powers of steel-faced plates. This supports the opinion of the Italian committee, who considered that the yielding of the backing at Spezia told much more against the compound plates than the steel. Any one who looks at the indication of concentric hair cracks which are apt to be formed in compound plates, almost like the circles round a stone in water, will perhaps concur in thinking that the value of hard backing to this class of armour is peculiarly great. . . . . . We are in no way detracting from the qualities of the plate, which is apparently beautiful. It would, however, we think, be manifestly impossible for any 12-in. plate to stand the blow we have to consider under any ordinary conditions. Giving it all credit for excellence, then, we have to explain why it bore much more than twice the blow that would generally smash such a plate up. We suggest the following:—The plate, with its hard surface and hard backing, resisted the shot very sharply and rigidly; this being a chilled shot, broke under such a shock much more easily than a good steel shot would do. In fact, under these particular conditions, a softer shot with more tenacity might have done better. Still, an enormous force was at work, breaking and tearing out rings of metal close round the shot, and actually crushing in the face of the granite behind it, and it is to be noticed that there are no detached bruises on the plate-face, so that the work was delivered well at point of impact. The plate had been cracked from the front to a depth of 9½ in. at the edge, but the shot was unable to bend it back and tear open the remaining thickness from the opposite side, and so the blow was borne."

This is the very opinion arrived at in April by the Italian Minister of Marine, who, in his speech in the Chamber of Deputies, stated that the experiments at Maggiano "were executed under conditions absolutely unfavourable to compound armour through the bad bolting, and owing to the backing being entirely of wood, and being thus more yielding than the steel sides of a vessel." Our contemporary then proceeds to discuss the magnitude of the blow:—

> "Let us compare it with that borne by other plates, taking as a measure the number of foot-tons total energy in the blow divided by the number of tons-weight in the plate. This gives us the number of foot-tons for every ton of plate. The 38-ton gun at Shoeburyness was fired on July 21, 1880, at a steel-faced plate, 18 in. thick. The shot had a calculated penetration of 18·6 in., and 12,980 foot-tons energy. The plate weighed about 24 tons. Hence the blow was 541 foot-tons per ton of metal. The effect was very slight, the shot breaking up badly. At Spezia, in November last, the compound plates weighed about 31·5 tons, and the heaviest blow on them was 33,960 foot-tons, that is, 1,046 foot-tons per ton of metal. Under this each plate broke to pieces. It is fair to say that it was the second blow, the previous one having been 654 foot-tons per ton of metal. The two together then make 1,700 foot-tons per ton of metal. At Ochta the steel plate was broken with a blow of 711 foot-tons per ton of metal. The plate now before us probably weighed about 10·5 tons only; a blow of 30,000 foot-tons then implies a shock of 2,857 foot-tons per ton of metal, that is, four times as heavy a shock as any single blow at Ochta on a plate of the same thickness. This was borne without breaking the plate asunder or penetrating it. Unquestionably, then, the shield is a wonderfully good combination, and very far better than the sandwiched iron one, which has not the hard steel face, and whose soft layers give the shot the opportunity of getting its head in, and attacking the granite fairly well."

Admiral Acton, the Italian Minister of Marine, when refuting the fallacies adduced in the Chambers by the partisans of the French steel plates, manufactured by the Messrs. Schneider at Creuzot, said:—"I am aware that these recent results, relatively unfavourable to the Schneider armour, caused no little surprise to those who had an impression of the goodness of the Schneider metal gathered from the photographs and drawings, showing the 48-centimètre compound armour fallen from the target after the second shot from the 100-ton gun, while the Schneider plate only partially fell at the third shot." But this the Minister attributed to the better bolting of the French steel plate, and subsequent experiments have proved he was right, as also when he said, "The kind of test prescribed by us tends to guarantee us in the only direction in which compound armour could give less favourable results than the Schneider, namely, the resistance to flexion. If compound armour will resist our comparative tests, and remain attached to the target, it will resist any projectile whatever, equally well or better than the Schneider, notwithstanding the fineness of the grain and the superiority of the Schneider in resisting mechanical, tensile, and elongation tests. In point of hardness, indeed, compound armour is far superior to Schneider. . . . . Compound armour, so long as its pieces remain attached and supported one against the other (as was shown at Gâvres, and, as may be seen, again to-day), behaves better against perforation than any other. There is no doubt about this. In compound armour, the projectile makes a clearly-defined penetration; whilst Schneider armour has its metal dislodged, presenting phenomena analogous to those produced upon the old iron armour, although in somewhat minor proportions. We have seen that the fragments which remain attached to the target can be perforated; and, in fact, at the second Ochta shot and at the fourth Spezia shot, this was done in Schneider's plates." Since these words were uttered, numerous experiments have been made, and the results have in each case borne out the correctness of the views held by Admiral Acton. In Germany, a Cammell compound plate has been fired at until it has become a mass of shot-holes, each plugged by the projectile that made it. The plate is intact, and if it were on the side of a ship, would still afford protection. With solid steel armour, the result has been totally different. The constant concussion caused by the shots striking steel plates, even when fired by light ordnance, disintegrates the steel, which crumbles under the succession of blows which in no manner affect compound armour. Quite recently, as reported last week in the Army and Navy Gazette, a number of German and foreign officers were invited by Herr Grüson to Buckau, near Magdeburg, to witness a series of interesting experiments with German artillery against German armour-plating. The gun employed was one of Krupp's heaviest calibres, the tube being more than 25 feet in length, and weighing over 50 tons, while the bore is 30½ centimètres. The shot used in the experiment stands over a yard high, and weighs half a ton. It is solid and conical, tapering to a very sharp point, the material consisting of Krupp's hardened steel. The charge of powder weighs 2½ cwt. The plates employed in the construction of the turret were of chilled iron, one mètre in thickness, and of a hardness equal to that of the finest and hardest steel. At the fourth round, the gun completely shattered the chilled iron plate. This was a result not anticipated by Herr Grüson, or the believers in steel or chilled iron armour. Here we have a section of a spheroidal turret, shaped very much like a huge melon, whose sides, over a yard thick, became disintegrated, and crumbled to pieces, leaving a large breach in the turret at the fourth shot from the Krupp gun. Compare this result with that obtained at Shoeburyness with a 12-in. compound plate when fired at by the 80-ton gun. Or, take the experiments recently concluded at Pola. Here a Krupp gun, firing a steel shot 10·9 in. diameter, 3½ calibres long, and weighing 690 pounds, fired by a charge weighing 212 pounds, pierced a target built up of a wrought-iron plate 15·6 in. thick, backed by 13½ in. of wood, supported by 9¾ in. of iron, and unlimited sand. The shot, at a range of 70 yards, pierced the target and buried itself six yards in the sand. Herr Krupp estimates that this gun will pierce armour 16¼ in. thick, at a range of 3,000 yards. But—there is always a but in these cases—if that armour is similar in quality to the compound plate experimented upon with the 80-ton gun at Shoeburyness, the Krupp gun will not pierce it. Very little reliance can, in fact, be placed upon the Pola trial, the conditions under which soft iron plates are manufactured varying so materially. Had the plate been compound, that is to say, faced with hardened steel, there can be no doubt but that it would not have allowed the shot through, and when all nations are commencing to use compound plates we fail to see the utility of such experiments. The Danish trials, which will be made in a few days on the island of Amager, will be of more importance, and will be watched with considerable interest by all maritime Powers. The steel-faced compound armour-plates for these trials will be supplied by Messrs. Sir John Brown and Co. and Messrs. Cammell and Co., of Sheffield, and by the French firm of Morrel Frères. The solid steel plates will be manufactured by the Messrs. Schneider, of Creuzot. All the plates are to be 9 in. thick, and are to be bent to represent the section of a turret. They are, however, small in area, too small, in our opinion, to allow of a thorough test for endurance to be made, the dimensions being 6 ft. 6¾ in. long by 5 ft. wide. We shall watch these trials with interest, for, up to the present, the result of all trials has most conclusively proved the superiority of compound over both iron and steel armour; while the results secured at Shoeburyness have produced as great, if not a greater, impression on the minds of all who have studied the question of guns versus armour, as did the memorable trial of the Glatton's turret, when a spectacle was witnessed which, as the foreign officers then present exclaimed, "No other country but England could organise or afford to carry out."

Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay, K.C.B., accompanied by Captain Harry Rawson, C.B., Lieutenant the Hon. Hugh Tyrwhitt, and Mr. George E. Marcon, Paymaster and Secretary, arrived at Constantinople last Sunday in the Helicon, to pay his respects to the Sultan. The Commander-in-Chief of the Mediterranean Fleet was received in audience by his Majesty shortly after his arrival in the Golden Horn, and was to have left yesterday to rejoin his squadron at Smyrna.

We were astonished to find that there was only one Naval officer who figured in the list of prize-winners for essays connected with deep-sea fisheries and pisiciculture at the late Fishery Exhibition. With so many opportunities as Naval officers undoubtedly possess of making themselves acquainted with the details and management of the fisheries of different countries, it is the more remarkable that, with the exception of H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh, Naval officers have had no part or share in the management, or in the lectures that have been given as to the fishing affairs of many nations. The Duke's paper was both excellent and well considered, and shows that during his term of service as Admiral-Superintendent of Naval Reserves he had at heart the interest of the fishermen, many of whom compose our best Naval Reserve men. Commander C. V. Anson is the solitary representative of the prize-winners, his name appearing in conjunction with that of E. H. Willett, Esq., F.S.A., as being winners of the first prize of £25 for three essays on oysterculture. We congratulate Commander Anson, and trust that the result of his labours may be a reduction in price and a greater supply of oysters.

The officers and men serving in the Channel Squadron complain most bitterly at having again to proceed to sea in a couple of weeks, after having been kept cruising since January last. They consider themselves most hardly used by the Admiralty in not being allowed to spend Christmas at home. Numerous letters have reached us on this subject, and it seems very hard that at the season of the year when it is customary for English families to gather together round their hearths and in their homes, that they should be sent away again, when there would be no apparent loss to the efficiency of the service if their cruise were delayed until after Christmas, and their stay at home altered from perhaps February and March to the latter part of November and December. Another complaint now generally heard in the service is that officers and men never know where they are going to, or for what service they may be required. The officers are treated whilst on half-pay as if it were war-time, and they were always sitting with their swords between their legs. Should real necessity arise, we are sure our Navy would be the last to complain of such matters, but in times of peace they should not always be required to be "booted and spurred," ready to go anywhere or do anything. In these matters, we submit to the Admiralty that a greater amount of consideration could well be exercised, with a resulting increase of contentment and efficiency.

The Enchantress will be recommissioned next year by a Staff Commander, there never having been any intention at the Admiralty to substitute this vessel for the Salamis, whose duties will be performed by the Valorous.

It seems strange, with the strained relations between the French and English ships-of-war off Madagascar, that no steps have been taken to reinforce our feeble and impotent squadron on the East India station. Instead, the Euryalus is sent to Bombay, and the Dryad, it is said, is ordered north, as her presence is distasteful to the French. So is the presence of any British man-of-war whose commander does his duty, and is not to be put down by bounce.

Commander Hope has, we understand, admitted that he acted hastily in ordering an itinerant concertina-player to cane an Engineer student of Keyham College, over which establishment Commander Hope presides. The Admiralty, we believe, are satisfied with Commander Hope's explanation of his reasons for acting as he did; but from the letter we publish in another column, it would appear as if the parents of the Engineer Students of Keyham College do not intend to let the matter be thus quietly hushed up.

The Russian Minister of Marine has thought the recent brochure, "The Battle of Port Said," to be of sufficient interest and importance, to publish a translation of it in the current number of his monthly mouthpiece, the Morskoi Sbornik.

Fleet-Surgeon Gerald Molloy, R.N., who has been attached to the Plymouth Division of Royal Marines since June, 1881, has been recommended by the Medical Director-General of the Navy to their Lordships for appointment to the dockyard at Malta, in the place of Fleet-Surgeon Lawrenson, deceased. Dr. Molloy has, we believe, accepted this appointment before the completion of his time with the Royal Marines, which would not have expired before June next.

Opinions are constantly being expressed as to the present strength of the British Navy, compared with that of other Powers, and at the annual Mayoral dinner recently held at Falmouth a Naval officer of 20 years' standing as a commissioned officer said, "It must be admitted that, in reference to the numerical strength and type of vessel, and especially in our armaments, England was not maintaining the relative position among Naval Powers which she held a quarter of a century ago." It thus appears to be the feeling on all sides that we are being outbuilt by France, and that if there should ever be a combination of the greater Powers against us, as there was 80 years ago, they would be in a position to collect such a preponderating naval force as would tax all our energies to resist. The fact is lost sight of that an enemy could now-a-days land 10,000 men with ease on any part of our coast without being interfered with. He could then, while the Military and Naval authorities were hurrying troops and ships to the invaded point, land an army on another part of the coast, and set our defensive forces, in their present state, at defiance.

Telegrams from Batoum announce the arrival there of the Russian Minister of Marine, Admiral Shestiakoff, who is visiting the various Russian Black Sea ports, in company with the commander of the Black Sea Fleet, Admiral Pestchouroff. The two Admirals are reported to have thoroughly inspected the port, with a view to carrying out the recent recommendation of a Naval commission, that it should be sufficiently enlarged to accommodate the largest squadron of ironclads. By a recent ukase, Batoum was elevated to the same Naval rank as a port as Sebastopol. This recommendation will have the effect of rendering it a powerful base for operations in the event of another war in Armenia. Batoum is connected with Kars by a fine chaussée, constructed after the close of the late war.

Acting Sub-Lieutenants who joined the Royal Naval College on or after the 13th day of February, 1883, must report themselves on board the Vernon, ready to undergo a month's instruction, by 8.45 a.m. on Monday, November 12.

Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., having left Zanzibar and proceeded to Bombay, it is safe to assume that the Admiralty, acting on the representations of the Foreign Office, are satisfied that the entente cordiale between this country and France, in regard to the Madagascar question, has been re-established.

The arming of the German Navy with torpedoes has been so actively pursued this year that at its close two-thirds of the vessels will be provided with torpedo gear. In the Naval Budget for the current year, £112,500 were set aside for equipping and arming 10 ships with fish-torpedoes, including 100 torpedoes. It is proposed to reserve £187,500 in the next Budget for furnishing and arming 18 more vessels with fish-torpedoes, including 150 torpedoes. It is expected that the work of equipment will be completed by next year, when the 64 vessels of the German Navy will be completely fitted up for torpedo warfare. The torpedoes, each of which costs £500, are being manufactured in the establishment of Schwazkopff, at Berlin. The question of launching the torpedoes below water has been definitely settled; but no decision has yet been come to with regard to the best method of launching above water, and experiments are still being carried on at Kiel to settle the point. In the current Budget, £90,000 are provided towards the construction of nine torpedo-boats. It is the intention to construct altogether 12 of them, but five are to be much larger than the seven either completed or constructing. Whilst the latter have a displacement of 50 tons, engines of 500 indicated horse-power, and crews of 10 men, the gunboat Natter, which is being converted into a torpedo-boat, will have a displacement of 140 tons, engines of 550 indicated horse-power, and a crew of 20 men. Probably the three torpedo-boats still to be built will have similar dimensions. The two armoured gunboats are likewise to be larger, and to receive engines of greater power, than the 11 vessels completed.

There can be little doubt as to the fact that the prominent position held by the Mediterranean Fleet in musketry in the last abstract of prize-firing is, in a great measure, due to the zeal and energy displayed by the officer who last year held the post of Musketry-Instructor at Malta, which zeal we have reason to know was noticed by Lord Alcester when in command on that station, as also by the present Commander-in-Chief; and when we state that the officer in question, who is now requalifying as Gunnery-Lieutenant in the Excellent, will have eleven years' seniority next month, and that he has served continuously without a single day's half-pay for the last nine years, we hope his claims for promotion will not be lost sight of, more particularly as the appointment has hitherto been considered a promotion one. In the present instance, it should not be forgotten that nearly all the more recent improvements in the course of musketry for seamen, such as payment of marksmen, firing at long ranges, and others, are due to suggestions which emanated from Lieutenant Dickinson.

A commission of Japanese Naval officers, at the head of which is Vice-Admiral Ito, is at present visiting the different ship-building yards and arsenals in Germany. It is reported that they have ordered of Messrs. Schwartzkopf, of Berlin and Kiel, 90 bronze "fish" torpedoes, at a cost of about £50,000, and that they are authorised by their Government to contract for the construction of several swift steel cruisers. Two such vessels have lately been ordered of a German private ship-building firm by an ex-officer of the German Navy, for a foreign Government, but it is not known whether or not they are identical with those required by Japan.

On November 3, an addition was made to the German Navy, in the shape of a composite-built gun-vessel, launched at the Imperial Dockyard, Kiel. She is a vessel of 884 tons and 650 horse-power, and is intended to replace the old gunboat Komet.

In 1870, Mr. Childers, in bringing in the Estimates for the Navy, asked the House to chortle over the great fact that the sum he asked for, £9,250,000, was the lowest since 1858-9, and involved a saving of £1,700,000 in 1868-9, and of £750,000 in 1869-70. In 1882, Mr. Trevelyan asked for £10,500,000.

It is a pity that a century ago there were no active philanthropists, such as Miss Daniels and Miss Weston, to take a lively interest in our soldiers and sailors in the matter of sobriety. Had it been so, we doubt if such an instance of depravity could have occurred as we find noted in the Naval Chronicle for 1811. It there states that "in 1779, one Mr. Constable, of Woolwich, going through the churchyard of that place at 12 o'clock at night, was surprised to hear a loud noise, like that of several persons singing. At first he thought it proceeded from the church, but on going to the church doors found them fast shut, and within silent. The noise continuing, he looked round the churchyard, and observed a light in one of the large family tombs; going up to it, he found some drunken sailors, who had got into the vault, and were regaling themselves with bread, beer, tobacco, and strong beer. They told him they belonged to the Robuste, man-of-war, and that, having resolved to spend a jolly night on shore, they had kept it up in a neighbouring alehouse till they were turned out by the landlord, and were obliged to take shelter here to finish their evening. In their jollity they had opened some of the coffins, and crammed the mouth of one of the corpses full of bread, cheese, and beer. Mr. Constable, with much difficulty, prevailed on them to return to their ship. On their way thither, one of their comrades, being much in liquor, fell down, and was stifled in the mud; on which his comrades took him up on their shoulders, bringing him back to sleep in company with the honest gemmen with whom he had passed the evening." Such a story as this appears to be scarcely credible, but it is vouched for as a fact.

We have already reported that the Russian Government were about to replace a number of their old torpedo-boats by boats of modern construction. The following have now been ordered:—One boat of Messrs. J. T. Thornycroft and Co., Chiswick, price £9,300; one boat of Messrs. A. Normand and Co., Havre, price £9,800; one boat of the Société des Forges et Chantiers de la Mediterranee, La Seyne; price unknown; and one boat of Messrs. Claparède, St. Denis, price £10,940. The boats are to steam at an average speed of 20 knots per hour.

The first of the vessels to be built in accordance with the new Brazilian Navy programme has lately been launched at Rio de Janeiro. This is the steel-built gunboat Iniciadora, 116 ft. 6 in. long, 25 ft. 10 in. wide, 8 ft. deep, and 268 tons displacement. She somewhat resembles the gunboat Medway, and carries her armament of two $4\frac{1}{2}$-in. Whitworth guns, like that vessel, protected by shields, which, in the case of the Iniciadora, are constructed of $\frac{5}{8}$-in. steel plates. She will be propelled by twin-screw engines of 260 indicated horse-power, which force is estimated to propel her at a speed of 10 knots per hour.

It is confidently asserted by German Naval officers that Herr von Caprivi, the new Minister of Marine, will apply to the Reichstag for the necessary funds for the construction of three new ironclads, which are to replace the Grosser Kurfürst, lost in 1878, and the Kronprinz and Friedrich Karl, which are now almost useless, owing to the weakness of their armour. It is very unlikely that Parliament will comply with the Minister's request, as his predecessor, General von Stosch, was unable to obtain the grant for building one ironclad only. It is not improbable that the desire of the German Minister of Marine to augment the strength of the Navy is due to the increased activity exhibited of late in the Russian ship-building yards on the Baltic.

The Admiralty, we notice, have called for tenders for two steamships for the conveyance of Cavalry, which ships are to be ready for fitting in the Thames by the 17th inst. They are to be between 3,500 and 4,000 tons, and the engagement is for three months certain. This seems to point to something else than the removal of the 19th Hussars from Egypt.

Lieutenant-Colonel Knollys, an Infantry officer who has written much on Military subjects, has contributed a paper on "Machine-guns" to the United Service Magazine, which may be read as a handy compendium of all the crudities connected with the faith in the new "fad," which some Naval and Military men are preaching in season and out of season. Some of these partisans of the faith are apostles of Nordenfelt and others of Hotchkiss, some of Gatling and others of Liutchok. No one questions the value, for certain purposes, of machine-guns, nor can the worth of shrapnell or of solid shell for special objects be gainsaid by any one whose opinion is worth taking; but the most ardent enthusiast cannot assert that a perfect machine-gun, which meets the requirements of the Military authorities in this country, has yet been devised. Lord C. Beresford fired the public mind with the happy phrase of "pumping lead" on the enemy, and it seems to be supposed that there is in existence some machine-gun, of rifle calibre, with a range of 2,500 yards, burning wood powder, and with a barrel sighted for ranges which can be trusted to perform that operation, and to silence a hostile artillery in a position which could not be touched by infantry fire. When a weapon of the sort is produced—if it have not the expected Hope gun to deal with—there will be time enough to talk of its adoption for the field as a part of battalion armament; but we confess to a want of faith in the potentiality of the weapon, though we do not pin our creed on the cuff of the Woolwich jacket. Machine-guns have a great future before them, but it will not lie in the direction of dominating the field of battle, but in humbler uses afloat and in defensive works. The armies of the great Powers have resolved to dispense with machine-guns in their artillery equipment.

During the recent visit of the Lords of the Admiralty to Portsmouth, they witnessed some shelter-trench practice with the Wallace entrenching spade. About 400 men from the Excellent took up a position on Whale Island. Skirmishers were advanced to protect the workers, who in 13 minutes completed a trench covering a front of about 500 or 600 yards. The whole party were then retired into the trench, and ordered to conceal themselves. This they did easily. They were then ordered to fire volleys, kneeling, when only their heads were exposed. When ordered to afterwards stand up, the completeness and value of the previous cover became apparent. Their Lordships expressed themselves as greatly pleased with the spade, and with the rapidity with which the work was done. It seems curious that the Navy should be the first to drill their men in the use of this valuable tool, while at Aldershot, Portsmouth, and elsewhere all shelter-trench practice, which is now enforced by the new six weeks' course, should, according to the old and complicated drill, be carried out either with regimental pioneers' tools, or with the heavy, full-sized pick and shovel. Surely, men ought to be practised with the tools which they will have to use on service, and for the use of which, we believe, Major Wallace has written, and submitted to the authorities, a short, simple drill. In our opinion, all regiments should be equipped with some of these tools, especially those corps first for foreign service. These spades should become part of the regular equipment carried by the soldier, and he should be continually practised with it according to the new drill, if approved of. Musketry and shelter-trench exercise should go side by side. We hope, when the method of carrying the spade, now under consideration, is settled, they may be issued to the troops without delay.

The construction of the detached forts around the fortress of Posen, which was commenced in 1876, is almost completed, as all that remains to be done is the fitting-up and furnishing of the barracks, &c. The line of forts, which are twelve in number, has an extent of eighteen miles, and is situated about two miles from the centre of the town. The German system of not advancing the forts too far from the enceinte, which has been carried out in almost all German fortresses, has been preserved in this instance, and presents a marked contrast to the principle adopted by most Continental Powers. German strategists and engineers advocate the maxim that an assailed outlying point should be within easy succouring distance of the main works of the fortress, at the risk even of subjecting the town itself to the possibility of a bombardment. Several German writers have compared this principle favourably with that adopted by the French in the case of Paris, where the line of defence is situated some ten miles from the town, which, they contend, it will be found impossible to succour without great difficulty and loss of time. Be this as it may, a comparison between the fortresses of Posen and Paris is inadmissible, as the works around the former place have been erected for the sole purpose of arresting the progress of a hostile army, without regard to the fate of the town, whereas one of the main objects of the Paris forts is to prevent a bombardment of the city.

German travellers returning from Poland state that the fourteen fortresses which the Russian Government is building around Warsaw are nearly completed, and that such is also the case at Kowno. While the Russian frontier to the west is well guarded against a German invasion, Germany has also made great preparations to resist an invasion from the Russian side, and what is somewhat singular is that the works have been conducted almost simultaneously and in much the same way upon both sides of the frontier, and are being completed at about the same time. The works of the twelve fortresses around Posen are also nearly completed.

The appointment of Officer Commanding the Riding Establishment at Woolwich is vacant, by the approaching retirement of Major the Hon. A. Stewart.

The Regulations lay down that to exempt an officer from examination, should he desire to obtain an Adjutancy in the Auxiliary Forces, he must have held for at least twelve months the adjutancy of his regiment. It is, of course, very right that this should be so. It is difficult to understand, however, why the holding of an acting adjutancy of a Brigade Depôt, or of a School of Instruction, should go for nothing in an officer's favour towards the same end. It cannot be that the amount of work performed by the Regimental Adjutant is greater than that done by the Acting Adjutant of the Brigade Depôt, or that his experience is considered greater. The appointment of an officer as Regimental Adjutant is, in many cases, due entirely to good-fortune. The recipient is, as a rule, a very young officer, especially in these non-Purchase days, and during his first twelve months he has in reality to learn the rudiments of his duties. He has a good staff of Clerks, and plenty to choose from, a sufficiency of drill instructors, in fact, everything in the regiment is in proper train, as it should be; the rough edge is taken off the recruits before they come to him; abroad, he has no recruits at all. He can hardly go wrong, and if he does, there are plenty to put him right; whilst his correspondence is comparatively light. Thus, having put in his twelve months or two years, which is a long time for a subaltern to hold an adjutancy, in these days of quick promotion, he is promoted Captain, and is available for an adjutancy in the Auxiliary Forces, without further trouble to himself. We will now take the case of an Acting Adjutant of a Brigade Depôt. In the majority of cases, he is a Captain of some standing and experience in the service; he is obliged to hold the same qualifying certificate as the regimental Adjutant, and as a rule is appointed for three years. His Brigade Depôt may consist of two, three, or four depôts, two of the battalions probably on foreign service. The amount of office work to be carried on and supervised by him is infinitely greater than in any battalion in the service, without the advantage of a well trained staff of clerks. In fact, the correspondence at a Brigade Depôt is almost endless. All the recruits have to pass through his hands during their three months at the depôt, not assisted, as in a regiment, by a competent staff of drill instructors, but by men either invalided from the foreign-service battalions, waiting to complete their time, or under orders to join their service companies. He has also to perform the duties of Instructor of Musketry, both for the trained men and the recruits, a duty never imposed on a Regimental Adjutant. In addition, he has to command his company, which, consisting, as it generally does at Brigade Depôts, chiefly of recruits, requires some close looking-after; he may also be in command of his depôt. All the correspondence with the sub-district is carried on in the Brigade Depôt office, thereby acquainting him to a certain extent with Auxiliary work, particularly with that of the corps in the sub-district which he may wish to join. In many Brigade Depôts the recruiting of the district is carried out by him, which entails a considerable amount of extra work and supervision. In spite of this far greater amount of work carried on, and therefore experience gained, the Acting Adjutant of a Brigade Depôt has to undergo an examination for the same post that his more fortunate junior obtains without inconvenience. It is true the examination may not be severe, but it is none the less an absurdity to call upon a man of more lengthened experience to undergo a test from which a junior is exempted.

We think it necessary again to correct an erroneous but very general impression, that officers, on being retired from the Active List, are free to supplement their inadequate half-pay, annuities, or pensions by taking other employment. The Appropriation Act says that no Army, Navy, or Civil non-effective pay shall be issued, unless the recipient subscribes such a declaration as may be prescribed by the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury. The declaration required by the Commissioners runs somewhat as follows:—

> "I am not in Holy Orders, and I have not held during any part of the period from 1st ——, 18—, to ——, 18—, both days inclusive, any other place or employment of profit, Civil or Military, in any department of her Majesty's service, nor in the Colonies, or possessions of her Majesty beyond the seas, nor under any other Government, except ——"

Then, under the Royal Warrant of May, 1878, regulating pay and promotion, pensions and annuities are not issued to officers holding civil positions, without the special sanction of the Treasury. Parliament and her Majesty's Government evince altogether too much conservatism in their dealings with the Colonies, possessions beyond the seas, and other Governments," and even indecent anxiety to cripple the prospects of her Majesty's pensioners. What do the authorities mean by these regulations? Is it their object to make the service less inviting, or do they wish to throw obstacles in the way of officers retiring; or do they aim at rendering hopeless the future of the discarded public servant; or do they desire to spite "the Colonies, possessions beyond the seas, and other Governments"?

Why should our policemen be at the mercy of every ruffian or madman who wields a knife or dagger? A few days since, an account of an attack upon eight policemen by a maniac armed with a dagger appeared in the daily Press. Six of the police were more or less badly wounded before the madman was overcome. Now, it is suggested that if our police were provided with small, bullet-proof shields, they would be able to close with either burglars or maniacs with far more prospect of immunity from injury than at present. The shields could be worn on the waist-belt when not in actual use, and when required could easily be slipped over the left arm.

RANK AND PAY IN THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Should a revision of the rank and pay of executive officers of the Royal Navy be contemplated, the following observations thereon are submitted for the consideration of Lord Alcester. Naval and military officers hold some of the best civil appointments under the Admiralty, whilst advancing in naval and military rank, and in some instances receive half-pay, in addition to large civil pay. [Our correspondent should name these appointments. Assertions are of little value.—ED. A. & N. G.] In the past, the favoured few in the higher grades in the Navy have received more than their fair share of rewards as naval officers,—retiring on both naval and civil pensions, or on naval pay, with £300 a year good-service pensions. [Facts again are required to prove this assertion.—ED. A. & N. G.] In the future, naval executive officers should be paid for naval services only by the Crown, and if employed at the Admiralty or anywhere else on shore should be borne on a ship's books, with a suitable shore allowance, and their pay should be chargeable to naval active service in estimates. [In how many cases it is otherwise should be stated.—ED. A. & N. G.] The great drawback to the naval officer is his loss of time on half-pay, and if he could insure constant employment, and promotion in a reasonable time, for services performed, his position would be greatly improved. Scales of pay for executive officers were framed after taking into consideration their advancing to the highest grade in their profession, and thereby earning a substantial retirement. The rule, "Retirement from the active list not to disqualify any officer for employment at or under the Admiralty," should be cancelled. Naval officers on the active list only should be employed on active duties, whether at sea or on shore, seeing the crowded state of the lists of half-pay officers of every grade in the Royal Navy. It should always be borne in mind that the executive officers of the Royal Navy are specially combatant officers commanding the fighting sailors, and others in charge of the ship's duties, and from the sub-lieutenant to the captain of the ship must have a thorough knowledge of seamanship, navigation, pilotage, the use of implements of naval warfare, and the steam engine. Any lieutenant might suddenly find himself in command of a ship, should his commanding officer be disabled, or killed or wounded in action. Is it consistent, therefore, to allow a lieutenant of a ship to hold a special appointment, and receive extra pay for one branch of his duties? Surely an efficient lieutenant has sufficient occupation on board, without special work to do. Why are navigating lieutenants kept on a separate list, and only advanced to the rank of staff captain, whilst gunnery lieutenants and torpedo lieutenants—who receive extra pay for these ratings—are eligible to be advanced to flag rank? Should navigating officers be kept on a separate list, they should be rated as navigating officers, and not as navigating lieutenants, as all lieutenants have to pass in navigation, in short should go back to the old rating of master. [Our correspondent is apparently unaware of the fact that the Admiralty have taken steps to bring about the entire abolition of the separate List he complains of, and that, by the reform introduced by Mr. Cory, when First Lord of the Admiralty, navigating lieutenants, that is to say, the old masters, will soon cease to exist as a distinct class, as they are rapidly retiring or dying out.—ED. A. & N. G.] What are the duties of the officers and men of the Marine Artillery on board ship, and of naval gunners? Short-sighted policy, indeed, and waste of public money is the system now pursued in both Army and Navy of retiring experienced and active officers in the prime of life, in many instances giving officers more than their full pay as an inducement to retire with a step in rank. By the way, is it lawful and right to confer a step in rank, in naval or military rank, upon ineligible officers on retirement? Honorary rank detracts materially from the value of substantive rank. Honour to whom honour is due! Admirals and captains are promoted by seniority, and this rule should apply to commanders and lieutenants, excepting in cases of special promotions, which should be of rare occurrence.—I am, &c.,

St. Stephen's Club, October, 1883. OBSERVER.

[We have published this letter solely to enable the service to learn how very little even distinguished civilians know about the Navy, for our correspondent mixes up truths and fallacies in a most remarkable manner.—ED. A. & N. G.]

The Orient Steam Navigation Company's steamer Garonne, bringing home the paid-off crew of the Miranda, is due to arrive at Devonport on Nov. 20.

The Russian ironclad Minin, which was considerably damaged during a gale in the early part of October, has been repaired in the dockyard at Gibraltar, and has sailed for Naples, where she will be inspected by the Russian Admiral. The Minin will then proceed to China.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

Route-marching by the three arms has been continued during the week. The Lieutenant-General Commanding has ordered Brigadiers to vary these exercises during the winter with minor tactics and brigade drill at their discretion, according to the weather.

Owing to the small number of "duty men" in the command, efforts are being made with considerable success to reduce the number of specially employed men, orderlies, batmen, servants, &c., so that as many men as possible may be available for legitimate duties, and for the necessary guards, &c., which press heavily at present on the weakened garrison.

The Committee appointed under instructions from the Horse Guards in March last for the purpose of revising the Kriegs-spiel Rules (Major-General Willis, C.B., president) reassembled at the 2nd Brigade Office on Wednesday, to draw up their final report.

Major Hutton, Brigade-Major, has been appointed hon. secretary to the Cricket and Lawn Tennis Club; Captain Spens, 85th L.I., to be Divisional Captain during the ensuing season.

Captain Bennett, R.E., is appointed hon. secretary of the Golf Club, which is now in working order.

A Pigeon-shooting Club has also been formed, with Lieutenant Lloyd, R.H.A., as hon. secretary.

The Divisional Music Society has been resuscitated, with Major-General the Hon. W. Feilding as president, and Colonel Cleather, Inspector of Gymnasia, hon. secretary. The latter officer, when on the Staff here some years ago, was a prominent member of this society, which did not long flourish when he left the station. His appointment is a hopeful augury of its future success.

NAVAL OFFICERS AS CONSULS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—The recent appointment of Naval officers to consulships in Africa has suggested to me that the example thus set might be followed in other cases. It is an absolute necessity that England should have at her disposal many more Naval officers than she can employ afloat in peace time; and in consequence, many are kept on half-pay, doing nothing for themselves or for their country, for long periods—notably, post-captains after their promotion. Now, if some harmonious arrangement were come to between the Admiralty and the Home, Foreign, and Colonial Offices, these officers could be given employment during half-pay, for which they are excellently suited, and equally to their own and the nation's advantage.—I am, &c.,

R. N.

During the summer months, the detachments of Royal Marines at the close of their periodical course of gun-drill instruction in the battery attached to their head-quarters at Plymouth, are embarked for a day in gunboats for shot practice at sea, but the season having ended, they now carry on this practice from either the gunnery-ship or her tender in port.

The Admiralty have decided to arm the new ocean cruisers Leander and Arethusa with ten 6-in. breech-loading rifled guns, six of which are to be mounted on the Vavasseur sliding carriages, and four on revolving carriages. The masting of the Leander is almost completed, and the vessel will leave the Medway shortly for the measured mile on Maplin Sands, for the purpose of again testing her engines and machinery.

The Admiralty have arranged with Messrs. Laird to supply the engines and machinery of the Pylades, a large composite sloop in course of construction. The Pylades was commenced about a year ago, and will be ready for launching in February next. Her engines are to be 1,100 horse-power, and she is to be armed with twelve 5-in. breech-loading rifled guns, mounted on Vavaseur carriages, with five machine-guns. The Pylades is estimated to cost £75,000.

Reviews.

Reeves's Morphology: a Treatise on Practical and Applied Anatomy. By Henry Albert Reeves.

One of our ablest surgeons has written a practical and scientific work on anatomy, of unquestionable merit. Were it not that a large portion of the readers of this journal consists of Army and Navy surgeons, and that the work contains valuable technical matter of the greatest use to others, a notice of this treatise might be considered out of place. When completed, it will assume the proportions of a magnum opus, and will extend to three volumes of 700 pages each. We are not aware of any other anatomical work which treats the subject in a manner so exhaustive; and from its pages demonstrators, lecturers, and professors of anatomy may learn how to prepare subjects, from the initial process of injecting and preserving them, to the final mounting of them for museum purposes. In order to properly appreciate the value of Mr. Reeves's labours. the student or professor must himself search the volume. If he do so, he will find abundant evidence of knowledge in anatomical and surgical subjects, and on writing generally, possessed by Mr. Reeves. The best test of a man's work, and one by which all superficial scribes must fail, is the following:—Has this man had ample opportunities of acquiring knowledge and experience on the subject he professes to treat, and how long has he exercised them? In this instance, the author has for many years been engaged as surgeon at nearly half-a-dozen leading metropolitan hospitals, general and special, using the splendid opportunities afforded to him. From contemporary announcements, we observe that the following books are now in the press, and will be produced in due sequence:—"Bodily Deformities and their Treatment;" secondly, "Diseases of the Breast;" thirdly, "Diseases of the Rectum, including Piles, Fistula, and Stricture;" and judging by the book before us, we feel sure that each work will be the outcome of thorough and persevering study.

Military Law. By Major Sisson Pratt, R.A. (Kegan Paul and Co.)—The observation made by the editor of this useful manual that the effect of recent legislation has been rather to complicate than to simplify the Military Code, is willingly accepted by a majority of those who study military law at the present time. In fact, the editor of the present treatise, whose opinion is entitled to respect, decidedly thinks that, although recent legislation may have been of service in some respects, it has been directly injurious, by interfering with the simplicity which accompanied the administration of military law under the Military Act and Articles of War. The object of the manual under notice is to afford officers and non-commissioned officers some assistance in overcoming the many difficulties which attend the study of the legal part of their profession. It is well calculated to perform that office in all respects, particularly so from the method of arrangement which has been adopted. Mr. O'Dowd's simple, but at the same time comprehensive manual on that branch of military law which is applicable to courts-martial, answers the purpose it was intended for completely. There is nothing to prevent the present manual from proving as useful as that one referred to.

Scraps. By Lord Saltoun. (Longmans and Co.)—The author of these entertaining volumes considers it necessary to give some explanation as to how they came to be written. But none are required, the book is sufficient in itself. Of course, no one can expect anything very striking, any remarkable dramatic effects or thrilling incidents by land, fire, or water. If he do, he will be disappointed; but he will find a collection of scenes and anecdotes chiefly relating to Ireland, and all, without exception, affording capital reading. The author has evidently a "grow" towards the green island, and cherishes the memories of the old coaching days, the now-exploded custom of having your man out whenever it was convenient, the "still" hunts, the dances on the green, and, above all, fighting with bailiffs. The first four pages of Scraps are sufficient to prove that the author has not altogether mistaken his vocation, when he takes up his pen to picture some strange traits of Irish character and Irish customs. He has done this just in the manner it should be done,—that is, naturally, and evidently correctly. No straining after effect, no exaggerating the curious facts that came under his observation, but honestly consulting his memory when any doubt might arise as to some story he wished to relate. It is easy to guess that during the approaching holidays youngsters who have learnt to regret Mayne Reid and Whyte-Melville, will be delighted to fall back on Lord Saltoun's Scraps.

MESSRS. GEORGE ROUTLEDGE AND CO.'S PUBLICATIONS.—It is always difficult to know where to begin the great variety of Christmas books with which Messrs. Routledge usher in the season. We confess to a certain amount of bias in favour of R. Caldecott and of Kate Greenaway, and, therefore, select the former to open the ball. The Hey-Diddle-Diddle Picture-Book, by Randolph Caldecott, may be already familiar to many readers, but it will prove, no doubt, not in the least degree less amusing. It contains four pathetic little stories, with many engravings, some of which are printed in colours.—Where are You Going, My Pretty Maid? an old song, exhibited and explained, is a charming production. The first coloured print introduces us to the young squire, who, on his mother's advice, proceeds to ride off in search of a wife with a fortune. Gaily he ambles along on his gallant grey till he meets the simple, little milk-maid, and obtains her permission to accompany her to see the cows milked. Evidently his admiration increases rapidly, but when he questions her as to her fortune and finds that it is represented by nothing more than her face and figure, he beats a most ignominious retreat, chased by all the children in the fields and all the dogs in the village.—Hey Diddle Diddle, the Cat and the Fiddle, presents a jovial, rollicking little party just concluding a round dance of little mites to old Pussy's music. There he sits, and does all he can to make the fun go faster. His music is, however, too killing, it so bewilders the cow that she jumps over the moon, while the cynical little dog, with his tongue lolling out of his mouth, laughs at the sport, and the feeling of the dish is so overcoming, that away it runs with the spoon. Little in the way of sketching can surpass the drawing which represents this calamity, and there, perched on a lofty sideboard, sits the ubiquitous puss, without even one crack to his violin strings, and quite fit to go on again. —We have met Baby Bunting before, and have laughed again and again at the hard lines ordained to him, and the manner in which he overcame them.—Next comes a chef d'œuvre, A Froggy he would a-Wooing Go, and wonderful was his "get up" when he did go, in spite of his mother's disapproval. He wore an entire suit of cerulean blue and close fitting, a masher collar, an opera hat, and a bouquet of choice flowers. Well, the poor, ill-conditioned frog fell on hard times; his adventures were terrible, and his ending most pathetic:—

> "But as Froggy was crossing a silvery brook,
> Heigh-ho! says Rowley,
> A lily-white duck came and gobbled him up,
> With a rowdy powdy, gammon and spinach, heigh-ho, says Anthony Rowley!"

—Little Ann, illustrated by Kate Greenaway, and printed in colours by Edmund Evans, is a dainty rare-bit. It is really a choice book for children, being a copious selection of poems written by Jane and Anne Taylor. There are nearly 60 in number, some of which have much more than ordinary merit, and each of which is fully illustrated in Kate Greenaway's best style.—We have also to say a word of praise in favour of A Toy-book, by "Phiz" (Hablot Brown), known all over the world. It is a really enjoyable book for youngsters who are devoted to pictures and implements of sport. "Phiz's" Merry Hours—something of the same kind. Also, "Phiz's" Funny Stories; "Phiz's" Baby Sweethearts (this is sure to attract attention); "Phiz's" Funny Alphabet, and Kate Greenaway's Calendar for 1884.—Among this packet of books, we find a more instructive one, suited for grown-up youngsters, The Prince, and other pieces from the Italian of Niccolo Machiavelli, with an introduction by Henry Morley, also a description of "The Grape Vine," by John Simpson.

THE ARMY PAY DEPARTMENT IN INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In your issue of Aug. 4 last, you say, in reply to the query, by "Under Orders," regarding the pay, &c., of majors and paymasters serving in India, that you "have no doubt but that Government, taking into consideration that all officers of other Departments serving in India with the rank of major receive the allowances of that rank, will grant the same to the majors of the Army Pay Department." I regret to state that the claim of these officers for the allowances of their rank has been refused. Why so? The officers of the Department cannot understand, as the claim is apparently a just one. When the Warrant of July, 1881, came into force, the Indian Government immediately granted the captains, promoted majors under it, increased pay and allowances. Now, these officers, who at home are only drawing 13s. 6d. a day, as against 17s. 6d. drawn by the majors and paymasters, receive in India 640 rupees, plus 30 rupees command pay, total 670 rupees a month, as against 506 rupees a month which the paymaster receives, a difference of 164 rupees a month. This appears a most glaring anomaly, more especially so as at home the paymaster draws 6s. 3d. a day allowances, which the junior majors cannot draw. Thus, while at home the former draws 10s. 3d. a day more than the latter, in India he receives 164 rupees a month less. Is it to be wondered at that the officers of the Department consider the claim they have submitted a just one? Can you, Sir, inform these officers whether the Indian Government have the power to ignore Royal Warrants, "India being a part of her Majesty's dominions, and garrisoned by British regiments, to which these Warrants apply"? And if they have this power, how is it that they recognise the Warrant of July, 1881, but not that of April, 1883? The table of comparative pay and allowances I append will clearly show how badly treated the Department is in India. If there were paymasters attached to every regiment serving in India, out of the 167, the number now in the Department, 58 would be suffering under the hardship I have described. Within the next three years, 20 paymasters serving in India will be promoted majors, on completion of five years' service, and when it is considered that the liberal terms offered to officers of the combatant branches to induce them to enter the Pay Department do not have effect in India, it will be seen that paymasters with the rank of captain are also labouring under a great injustice.

For several weeks past a rumour has been in circulation to the effect that the Enchantress has been selected to act as tender to the Channel Squadron, in succession to the Salamis, which has been broken up, and also that the Royal yacht Osborne in its turn is to be appropriated to the service of the Lords of the Admiralty. That rumour, says the Portsmouth Times, has been published almost as a definite fact in the Times, but the arrangement is at present simply conjectural.

The Army.

3RD DRAGOON GUARDS. The colonelcy is vacant, by the death of Gen. R. R. Robertson, in his 74th year. Deceased was born in 1809, and entered the Army by purchase as a cornet in the 7th Dragoon Guards in June, 1826. In 1845, while serving in South Africa, he was in command of the successful expedition against the insurgent Boers beyond the Orange River, and in 1846-7 he served as brigadier and in command of his regiment in the campaign against the Kaffirs, and for these services received the medal and the Companionship of the Bath. He obtained the rank of gen. in 1875. He was a J.P. and D.L. for the county of Perth.

3RD HUSSARS. The regiment will move from Hounslow to Aldershot, on the arrival home of the 19th Hussars.

4TH HUSSARS. The regiment, as at present arranged, will proceed from Hounslow to Norwich, on the arrival of the 19th Hussars from Egypt.

7TH HUSSARS. It is proposed to move the regiment from Colchester to Aldershot.

10TH HUSSARS. On arrival home from India the regiment will be stationed at Shorncliffe.

19TH HUSSARS. On arrival home from Egypt the regiment will be stationed at Colchester.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

The Times' correspondent at Constantinople telegraphs on the 3rd inst.:—"Mr. V. C. P. Caillard, R.E., who succeeds Mr. Edgar Vincent as English member of the Council of Administration of the Turkish Debt, has arrived here. Major H. Trotter, R.E., Military Attaché at the British Embassy, has also arrived."

GRENADIER GUARDS. Lieut. C. W. Daly, 2nd Batn., died suddenly at the Queen's Hotel, Aldershot, yesterday, the cause of death being collapse in the early stage of enteric fever.

SCOTS GUARDS. Lieut. Cutlar-Fergusson has been appointed aide-de-camp to Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Alison, K.C.B., at Aldershot.

10TH LINCOLNSHIRE REGIMENT. Notwithstanding persistent rumours to the contrary, the 2nd Batn. will not move this season. Major Denny shortly leaves head-quarters at Seetapore to take over command of the left-half battalion at Benares from Major Little. Lieut. Pim also goes to Benares, where he will perform the duties of acting pay and qrmr. in place of Lieut. Grant, who is under orders for the depôt. Lieut. Beaver is a probationer for the Staff Corps. Before the conclusion of the leave season, one or two enterprising spirits organised a "Tenth week" at the charming hill station of Nynee Tal, which proved a great success in every way. A team was collected, consisting of Major Little, Capts. O'Gorman, Wiley, and Barter, Lieuts. Rawlinson, Ivatt, Du Buisson, Newbury, Lloyd, and Fasken, and two men, to contend against the rest of the station at cricket, lawn-tennis, polo, billiards, and rifle-shooting. The 10th won the tennis and rifle-shooting, but lost the cricket and billiard matches, the latter by a short head. The odd event—polo—unfortunately fell through, as the regiment could not muster sufficient ponies up there. There were four dances, including a fancy ball at Government House, during their stay, not to mention many other entertainments. The team in its turn entertained Nynee Tal society at a large picnic on the day of the rifle-shooting. They owe many thanks to the rest of the station for the open-handed hospitality shown to them on all sides, and may, without fear, favour, or affectation, say that it was the most enjoyable time they have spent since they landed in India.

12TH SUFFOLK REGIMENT. Major W. H. Queade, late of the regiment, died suddenly on the 12th inst., aged 57 years.

15TH HUSSARS. On Thursday, a detachment, equipped as mounted infantry, paraded at Aldershot for inspection by Lieut.-Gen. Sir A. Alison. A series of evolutions and movements, illustrative of the work of mounted infantry in the field, were carried out.

20TH LANCASHIRE FUSILIERS. The 1st Batn., at Templemore, is about to be moved to Fermoy.

21ST ROYAL SCOTS FUSILIERS. The 1st Batn. is to be moved immediately from Dover to Aldershot.

23RD ROYAL WELSH FUSILIERS. The 2nd Batn., at Pembroke, is in readiness to proceed to Ireland, where it will be stationed at Templemore.

37TH HAMPSHIRE REGIMENT. This regiment is under orders to proceed to England from Fermoy, when it will be stationed at Gosport.

42ND BLACK WATCH (ROYAL HIGHLANDERS). A handsome memorial brass, of a design which is a departure from the conventional, canopied, ecclesiastical pattern of such monuments, will be placed in St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh, to commemorate the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men lost by the regiment during the late campaign in Egypt. At the base is sculptured the turf mound of a grave, and standing with bent head, in an attitude of mourning, are two figures, one at the grave-head, an officer, and the other at the grave-foot, a private soldier, leaning on his rifle, both being in the uniform proper to a Highland regiment. Beyond the grave in the distance are the Pyramids and palms, and for a border to the brass two lofty palms rise, one on either side, arching the top with their branches. The badge of the regiment is engraved above an inscription which states that:—"This tablet is erected by the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of the 42nd Royal Highlanders (Black Watch), in affectionate remembrance of their comrades who fell in action or died of wounds and disease during the Egyptian campaign, 1882." Then follow the names, first of those who fell in action—Lieut. T. J. Graham Stirling, Lieut. I. G. McNeil, Serjt.-Major John McNeil, Lance-Corporal James Bannigan, and seven privates; next, of those who died of wounds—Lieut. J. A. Park, Serjt. Peter Walker, and four privates; and then of those who died from other causes—Capt. and Adjt. E. Lee, Serjt. Donald McKenzie, Corporals William Bateman, Alfred Paskett, and William Garlick, and nine privates. The tablet, which is 6 ft. high by 4 ft. wide, is the work of Messrs. Matthews and Hodgson, at whose place of business, 113 Regent Street, it will be on view for a little while.

59TH EAST LANCASHIRE REGIMENT is under orders to leave Chatham for Dover.

66TH BERKSHIRE REGIMENT is under orders to proceed from Gosport to Chatham.

84TH YORK AND LANCASTER REGIMENT. Capt. Darnell vacates the adjutancy of the 16th Lancashire R.V. on the 15th inst., having held the appointment for five years.

97TH QUEEN'S OWN (ROYAL WEST KENT REGIMENT). The colours of the regiment were deposited on the 1st inst. in All Saints' Church, Maidstone. The colours were escorted to the church by the depôt stationed at Maidstone Barracks, the permanent staff of the brigade depôt, recruits of the West Kent Militia, and two companies of the local Volunteers. The colours were received by the vicar, the Rev. F. E. Dyke, and the Rev. T. Moore, chaplain to the forces, and the vicar delivered an address, during which he alluded to the many engagements through which the old colours had been carried. A special service was afterwards held.

PAY DEPARTMENT. The officers in Egypt are distributed as follows with regard to their duties:—Col. Olivey, C.B., and Capts. St. John Kneller and Long at the Head-quarters Treasure Chest Office in Cairo. Capt. Kneller has also financial charge of the 75th Gordon Highlanders. Capt. Orange is pymr. of the 3rd Batn. 60th and 79th Regts. Capt. A. G. P. Dowdall, of the 35th Regt. and 19th Hussars, and Major Thornhill, of the 42nd Regt., are also assisting in the Head-quarters Office. From the above, it will be seen that at least three more paymasters are wanted in that country. "F. S. D." writes:—"About a month ago you alluded in an article to the most urgent requirements of the Department for removing the grievances complained of, and obtaining probationers. As this is the season for considering the Estimates, permit me to trespass on your columns, to set forth, in as few words as possible, the necessary changes which, sooner or later, must be made in the rank, pay, and pension rates in the Pay Department, in order to ensure a complete establishment and a contented body of officers:—1. An officer of the Department at the War Office to conduct the personnel under the Accountant-General. 2. The number of chief paymasters to be increased from 15 to 20, to accord with the number of important districts commanded by General officers. 3. Forage for chief paymasters. 4. Allowances to be optional to all, wherever quartered, in accordance with the provisions of the Warrant creating the Department. 5. Staff paymasters, after five years' service in that grade, to have the honorary rank of lieutenant-colonel. 6. A corps of clerks, under the complete control of the officers of the Department. 7. Paymasters, who joined after July 1, 1881, to have the honorary rank of major, if captains previously, after five years' service in the grade, and if previously subalterns, after eight years. 8. A charter for honours, so that officers on active service may be similarly recognised to those in other Departments. 9. Increase of pay: Paymasters, after 15 years' service in the grade, 22s. 6d. a day. Staff paymasters, 25s. a day, instead of 22s. 6d.; and after five years' service, 27s. 6d., instead of 25s. To come into force when paymasters have to serve over 10 years before promotion to the grade of staff paymaster. 10. To place the Department somewhat more on a par with the Commissariat and Ordnance Departments, in which a deputy-commissary-general (ranking with lieutenant-colonel) gets £600 at 60 years of age, when compulsorily retired, whereas a chief paymaster only receives £450 under similar circumstances. Retired pay should be increased as follows: Paymasters, after 20, 25, and 30 years' service, the same rates as now, viz., £200, £250, and £300, but after 35 years' service, or compulsorily at 55 years' of age, £350, instead of £300 per annum. Staff paymasters, after 20 years' service, £300, instead of £250, and after 25 years, a similar increase of £50; and so on up the scale. Similarly an increase of £50, on the scale laid down for chief paymasters, right up the scale, culminating in £500, instead of £450 for one over 35 years' service, or compulsorily at 60. Voluntary retirement, after 25 years' service, which has been recently conceded, to apply to the rates quoted above. The Department is so much indebted to you for your persistent advocacy of its just claims, that I hope you will find space for the above."

The Auxiliary Forces.

YEOMANRY CAVALRY.

QUEEN'S OWN ROYAL (GLASGOW, &C.) YEOMANRY CAVALRY. A competition took place on the 27th ult., at the Cadzow Rifle Range, Hamilton, at 200, 500, and 600 yards, 7 rounds at each distance. A and B against C and D Troops. At the close of the match C and D Troops were declared the winners, having beaten their opponents by 111 points. After the competition the losing members entertained their conquerors to dinner, Capt. Neilson in the chair. The match was got up merely for practice, and as a source of encouragement. A pair of field glasses were presented to the regiment by Serjt. Laird, of D Troop, and as Trooper T. Rae, of C Troop, made the highest score in the competition, he has the honour of having his name inscribed on them. The shooting of the regiment has improved very much of late, owing to the energy displayed by their present adjutant, Capt. Marrow, King's Dragoon Guards, who spares neither time nor trouble in everything connected with the regiment.

2ND WEST YORKSHIRE. Last Wednesday a trooper in this regiment was fined by the West Riding Bench, at Halifax, £10, and costs, for neglecting to present himself for training in July last. This is the first case since Sept., 1850, in which it has been found necessary in this regiment to prosecute for this offence. During the last three years shooting clubs have been established in each troop. It is very difficult for the men to obtain convenient ranges, as most of them live at considerable distances from the only one available, yet they meet every Friday in the year, and are producing a marked effect upon the regimental figure of merit.

TREATMENT OF ENGINEER STUDENTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I enclose you a cutting from the Western Chronicle. I have a son in the Engineers' College at Keyham, and shall be obliged if you will give publicity to the case, as this is not the first time that Engineer students have been shamefully treated. Had the young student been told by his captain to have given the foreign idling rascal a sound thrashing and turned him out of the building, I, as a parent, would have stood the consequence of paying a fine or receiving my boy back home, starting him in some other line. As there is no name mentioned we must remain in the dark; but I should like to assure the head of the establishment that, if he did as the papers say, there will be no time lost or expense spared to bring the case before Parliament, or try the result in a civil Court.—I am, &c.,

A PARENT.

EXTRACT FROM THE "WESTERN CHRONICLE."

"The attention of the local chief of the Naval service, and of all others whom it may concern, is invited to a story which for two or three days past has been generally current in Devonport, the accuracy of the details of which cannot be vouched for, as inquiries made in quarters that ought to be well informed have only resulted in obtaining a general confirmation, accompanied by a significant silence as to names and details. The story runs that a few days ago a concertina-player was displaying his skill, and, as he thought, delighting his audience in front of the Engineers' College at Keyham. One of the students in an upper room, not being of a musical turn, or possibly thinking that a practical joke was more enjoyable than a lively air, opened the window and threw some water upon the peripatetic musician. The man was first surprised, then alarmed, and finally indignant; and proceeding to the entrance to the College, demanded to see the chief of the establishment. He was ushered into the presence of some one who appeared to be in authority, and who, after listening to the narration, ordered before him the students located in the part of the building whence the water had come, and demanded who had done this guilty deed? One of the young men promptly stepped forward and acknowledged the offence, when, after some further parley (so goes the story), the official handed his cane or stick to the musician, and told the student to go outside in the street with the man and there receive his deserts, or words to that effect. The student, puzzled by such singular orders, obeyed, and received a somewhat severe chastisement, in the presence of several of his comrades and some of the general public. He did not resist, nor return the blows, not knowing how far his doing so might, under the circumstances, be regarded as a breach of discipline. He has since had, it is said, a somewhat hot time of it from his comrades, who thought he ought to have pitched into the fellow. But many of those to whom the narrative is told take another view of the matter, and ask whether it was a right and proper thing that her Majesty's uniform—which, of course, the student was wearing—should be thus degraded, and whether it was a right sort of punishment to mete out to a youth for any offence, great or small. It is not unlikely that the Admiral Commanding-in-Chief may share this view of the subject; and, if so, he will probably be more successful in eliciting the exact facts than the present writer, who can trust Sir Houston Stewart to do full justice in such a matter."

THE STATE OF THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—It is in no spirit of "having the last word," or with any wish to prolong an argument which seems unlikely to lead to any useful result, that I would ask you to give me space to say a few words upon the letter of "No Alarmist," which appears in your issue of the 3rd inst. I answered the first letter, signed by Capt. Cleveland, because it professed to "answer Lord H. Lennox from a Naval point of view," and because I thought that, in the first place, it did not answer him, and that, in the second place, it was to be looked upon more as the expression of opinion of one individual Naval officer, than of that of the service at large. I arrived at the latter conclusion in consequence of the almost universal opinions on the subject, which I have gathered in the course of conversation with numerous Naval officers who had given some thought to the subject, and whose opinions I thought worthy of respect. It would, of course, be absurd and most presumptuous for any individual officer to assume to himself the right to express the general opinion of the service upon such a subject, and I do not attempt to do so now, although I believe that the majority will agree in the main with my views. Though, perhaps, they would not care to call themselves "Naval alarmists," they would probably prefer to call themselves "no alarmists," and I have no doubt that in the day of battle they would be as "full of confidence" as the original "no alarmist;" but I cannot admit the contention of the latter,—that "it rests simply upon the basis of confidence or no confidence." In the Franco-German War, the French were confident of marching to Berlin, but their confidence was misplaced, and Heaven favoured the big battalions. I regret that I should have laid myself open to the charge of "scant courtesy." Feeling somewhat strongly upon the subject, I may have expressed myself somewhat more warmly than the rules of calm discussion justify; but if the charge is only based upon the principle that "it is but scant courtesy to express one's dissent from the arguments of another without stating one's reasons," I must hold myself absolved, and refer your readers to my former letter, wherein I think they will find that I have given some cogent reasons, and expressed them pretty strongly. The whole case may be briefly stated somewhat as follows:—If, on the outbreak of a war between England and France, their respective navies (composed partly of ironclads and partly of cruisers) were found to be equal, or even nearly equal, it would be in the power of France to do immeasurably more harm to England than England could do to her; some people even think (and not without reason) that a decided French victory at sea would involve England's absolute ruin, because England, being dependent upon the ocean not only for her wealth, but also for a large portion of her food, could be starved into "any terms of peace." Now, can any Englishman think calmly of what "any terms of peace" such as France would dictate would really mean for England? The question then arises,—Is it wise for Englishmen to leave themselves at the mercy of a very possible enemy, and not to ensure their wealth and their national honour at a fair rate? Perhaps I am wrong in mentioning the word "honour," as that is not much thought of, in the present day, so I will frame the question on the ground of wealth only. It must be always a somewhat thankless task to warn one's countrymen of an impending danger, and to tell them that they are not so safe as they think they are. If England has far greater wealth afloat than any other nation, and is dependent for her existence upon that wealth, then she ought to pay an adequate insurance for it, by maintaining a preponderating Navy. If she fails to do so (for the first time in her modern history), and still thinks she is safe, then I maintain that she is living in a fools' paradise. When a private individual fails to ensure his house against fire, most people think he is unwise, but there is no more absolute chance of the house being burnt down than if it were insured; whereas, if a wealthy nation fails to insure its national property, by keeping up an armament either by sea or land commensurate with that wealth, and capable of defending it, then there is more absolute chance of a catastrophe, for the wealth becomes a standing and irresistible temptation to some poorer and more warlike neighbour to come and take it. I appeal to all history, from bows and arrows to breech-loaders, to prove what I say.—I am, &c.,

A NAVAL ALARMIST.

THE ACCOUNTANT BRANCH OF THE NAVY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Lord Alcester, in contradicting a report circulated relative to his having stated that he was desirous of abolishing the Accountant Branch of the Navy and replacing it by combatant officers, volunteered the information that any "well considered" scheme for accelerating promotion in that branch of the service would meet with his support. This statement, although vague and meagre, justifies the assumption that his lordship is cognisant of the hopeless position of assistant-paymasters in the Navy, and is desirous of doing something to improve their present prospects. But surely the remedy is at once easy and inexpensive, and as it has been so often proposed hitherto, it can scarcely be regarded as otherwise than "well considered." The only feasible plan for putting an end to the present block which exists in the assistant-paymasters' list, and which threatens to continue until those officers' plight and prospects are even worse than they are at present, is to reduce the compulsory retirement age of paymasters from 60 to 55, and the optional from 55 to 50, thereby assimilating it to what obtains in the various other civilian branches of the Navy; and at the same time to increase the paymasters' list by 25, and abolish in toto the present system of placing assistant-paymasters in charge. Neither of these alterations would involve any appreciable increase in the Estimates, while they would have a highly beneficial and sensible effect in accelerating promotion. I would, in conclusion, remark that, in my humble opinion, the Accountant Branch of the Navy is itself very much to blame for its present deplorable condition. "Agitate, agitate, agitate," should be its motto, and if agitation were more freely indulged in and grievances exposed, I have no doubt that the Press of this country, both service and otherwise, would lend its generous support to obtain for them a redress of their legitimate grievances, and an improvement in their position and prospects. A member of the Admiralty Board has expressed his willingness to assist the Accountant Branch to improve their position. It now behoves that branch to place their grievances on record, and to lay their plans for redressing them before their Lordships through the medium of the service papers.—I am, &c.,

AN AGGRIEVED ACCOUNTANT OFFICER.

[It is not very clear from Lord Alcester's published statement whether he meant to assist the Accountant or the Combatant Branch.—ED. A. & N. G.]

SIR,—The rumoured disestablishment of the Accountant Branch of the Navy, referred to recently in the columns of the Army and Navy Gazette, revives a scheme propounded many years ago,—one that has been discussed more or less openly, but in a desultory manner, by those interested either for or against an inevitable change. For inevitable it is, however charmed may be the threatened life. The fate that has overtaken the Navigating branch will befall this one, and many will be of opinion that the sooner the abolition can be effected, with a due regard to the legitimate interests of the present class, the better it will be for the service and for individuals. Opponents of change will be ready with objections, doubtless, more or less valid; difficulties will present themselves, but will not prove to be insuperable; and it is, perhaps, only fair to the officers of a doomed race to say that their efficiency will not be surpassed, even if it be equalled. "Ways and means" also will have to be provided to console those cast forth into the desert, and the training of ardent "combatants" for a new sphere of action must involve some slight delay On the other hand, the advantages that may be expected to accrue from reorganisation will be obvious. Another "class" or "branch" will be improved off the face of the ocean, in itself a distinct gain; for their Lordships would be relieved from the howls of the unpromoted, while their brains would be no longer racked in devising schemes for accelerating advancement of juniors. A discontented body of officers would be replaced by others who would gladly, it is assumed, welcome additional allowances in compensation of a relinquishment of that combatant career of glory to which, in the days of their "very" youth, they had so fondly and, perhaps, so foolishly, aspired. Employment would be provided for languishing lieutenants, whose numerous alphabetical distinctions had not met with adequate recognition. Even the humble "G" might seek to exercise his talents in a new field. While in a monetary point of view, in the far future, might be anticipated an annual saving sufficient to gladden the heart of a financial secretary. That the co-operation of Lord Alcester might have been looked for in this matter was natural. As a "Junior" Lord, he formerly, it is believed, "superintended" the paymasters' department, and during his long service afloat he has, doubtless, had opportunities of evincing the interest he felt in its officers, and his consideration for them. But it would seem, unhappily, that his lordship's assistance cannot be now reckoned on, and it is a matter for regret. The statement that "Lord Alcester is not aware of having expressed an opinion in favour of abolition" is, however, a guarded one. To some it may be given to hope that an indulgence in the pleasures of memory may have a salutary effect, and that an opinion can be modified, though it may not have been enunciated at the Mansion House.—I am, &c.,

BARBAROSSA.

The Duke of Cambridge is to visit Edinburgh on Wednesday next, for the purpose of taking part in the ceremony of depositing in St. Giles's Cathedral the old colours formerly carried by Scottish regiments. According to the arrangements, which have been generally approved by his Royal Highness, the colours will be escorted from the Armoury at Edinburgh Castle, where they are now deposited, by parties composed, as far as possible, of members of the corps to which the colours belonged. His Royal Highness will present the colours to the authorities in charge of the building to be kept for safe custody and preservation. An appropriate service will then be celebrated.

The greatest activity prevails at Toulon dockyards in consequence of orders received from the Minister of Marine to push forward with all possible despatch the work on the ironclad Charles Martel, on the cruisers Papin and Faucon, and on two other cruisers. Similar orders have been received at Rochefort, where the ironclad gunboats Grénade and Mitraille and six other vessels-of-war are at present in course of construction.

The Chinese vessels-of-war building at the Vulcan Company's yard, near Stettin, are to be completed for sea with all possible despatch, so that they will be able to proceed to China considerably earlier than was originally expected. The ironclad Chen Yuen is already completely armoured, and it is expected that she will be ready for commission by the end of November. The launch of the large deck-armoured cruiser is to take place this month, instead of at the end of December, as was at first proposed. Four torpedo-boats are nearly ready to undergo their trials, and a large steam-dredger, likewise in course of construction for the Chinese Government, is also rapidly approaching completion.

Last week arrived at St. Petersburg from Paris the body of Admiral Count Putiatin, who was Russian Naval Attaché in England from 1861 to 1865. Admiral Putiatin earned his reputation chiefly by the prominent part he took in the friendly mediation of Russia in the negotiations that preceded the China War. He was also largely responsible for the annexation of the Island of Ashuradé, in the Caspian Sea, in 1842, which caused so much talk at the time. At the battle of Navarino, he was present as midshipman on the flagship; during the Crimean War he served on board the Pacific fleet. Of late years, the Count spent much of his time in England, in order to combat by our climate and medical skill a painful malady under which he has just sunk at Paris.

The Société des Forges et Chantiers, at La Seyne, have lately completed and despatched to the Danube a fine paddle-wheel steam-yacht for the Prince of Bulgaria. This vessel is built entirely of steel, and is 213 feet long, 24 feet 6 inches wide, and has a draught of only 4 feet of water. She was supplied by her builders with compound surface-condensing engines, with oscillating cylinders, which worked very well on the trial-trip, and propelled the vessel at a speed of 13·5 miles per hour. The yacht is named the Alexander.

The Russian Admiralty have ordered the Atlantic cruiser Europe to be equipped for a prolonged voyage, and sent from Cronstadt to Revel, to pass the winter there, so as to be able to quit the Baltic at the earliest moment in the spring. Everything is being made snug at Cronstadt for the winter, and in a few days the Naval season will come to a close. The Europe and Vladimir Monomarchus will be the last Russian men-of-war to quit Cronstadt this year.

The announcement which has gone the round of the metropolitan dailies, and has been reproduced in some of the local papers, says the Portsmouth Times, as to the prospective discontinuance of the Crocodile upon Indian trooping service, is purely speculative. She is being repaired under orders to be completed by February, the reliefs not being sufficiently heavy to necessitate her employment, but it is understood that if her services should be unexpectedly required, the date on which she could be got out of hand could be accelerated.

Army & Navy Gazette.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 10, 1883.

THERE exists at present a feeling of marked dissatisfaction among the Medical Officers of the Foot Guards, caused by the unexpected action of the senior Medical Officer of the Brigade. As many of our readers are aware, promotion among the Medical Officers of the Brigade goes by seniority among themselves. Until lately, they were precluded from any promotion beyond the rank of Surgeon-Major; but on the institution of the rank of Brigade-Surgeon, the privilege of acceding to that rank was extended to the Guards, and the senior Surgeon-Major was promoted to the rank and status of Brigade-Surgeon. The senior officer now serving is Brigade-Surgeon Elkington, whose commission is dated February 2, 1881. In 1868, following the examples of his predecessors for many years, he signed a document by which he undertook to retire on completing thirty years' service, unless by so doing he should be precluded from attaining a higher position. As there does not seem any prospect of further advancement for Brigade-Surgeon Elkington, we cannot see on what grounds he can honourably refuse to fulfil the contract to which he deliberately attached his signature. Promotion among the Medical Officers of the Brigade has for some years past been very slow. Dr. Elkington's decision will have the effect of rendering the prospects of juniors more gloomy than ever. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that Dr. Elkington really intends to repudiate the liability incurred by the signature on the document to which he attached his name on entering the Brigade. He must see how seriously such a decision would operate in stamping out all feelings of interest in their professional work on the part of those whose advancement is retarded. The feelings of the officers immediately concerned are very natural, for if, in this instance, the agreement, drawn up and signed, in accordance with the usages of the service, is set aside, a precedent will be established, which may in future result in all manner of complications, which are scarcely calculated to promote harmony, or that proper understanding among officers which is essential to the well-being of the Army. Neither should it be forgotten that, were it not for Dr. Elkington's predecessors having fulfilled their engagements to retire, he would not now hold the position he does. The action of Dr. Elkington can on no grounds be defended. It is not denied, we believe, that the contract exists. At the time it was drawn up, Dr. Elkington, it must be presumed, had every intention of abiding by it. We cannot, therefore, understand on what plea he now repudiates the responsibilities which the document entails. The matter is one that the Medical Officers of the Guards have a right to demand that the higher authorities, to whom the question in dispute may be subsequently submitted, shall consider on broad grounds.

General H.S.H. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, K.C.B., is to retain command of the Portsmouth District until April 1 next, in deference to the wishes of all classes of the civil community, with whom his Serene Highness has been most popular.

Now that the Army Estimates for the coming year are being prepared, it is to be hoped the farce of asking Parliament for a vote of 141,000 men for the Militia will not be again gone through. It is well known the authorities are quite satisfied with the existing state ef affairs, viz., a deficit of 25,000 men, for the Secretary of State for War stated last Session in extenuation the Militia had never been recruited to its full establishment. We would also suggest the advisability of cancelling the twenty odd columns that appear in the Army List of Militia battalions that were intended to be raised, but regarding which so few steps have been taken.

Major-General W. G. Cameron, C.B., will retain command of the Northern District until April 1 next.

We recently alluded to the hardships which Coastguardsmen frequently endure while being conveyed in sailing cutters to and from the district ships. We also referred to the discomfort to which their wives and families are subjected while being transferred from station to station. A recent event fully corroborates the facts then stated. A squad of Coastguardsmen were about a fortnight on board the cutter Stag, in transit to the Valiant at Rathmullen, from their stations in some of the central divisions in the Limerick District, a passage usually performed by steamers in half a day. The Stag was twice forced to run for safety to Killybegs Harbour, and on a third occasion to Gola Bay, where she lay windbound for several days. It is more than surprising that the Admiralty do not see the necessity that exists for employing a steamer for transferring the men, particularly at the present season of the year. It seems that nothing short of some fatal mishap will ever direct public attention, and then the attention of the powers that be, to what is really a scandal to any service. These small vessels, crowded with men, are often at a stormy period of the year beating along a dangerous and rock-bound coast, and the wonder is that a serious calamity has not long ago occurred. The men while on board have neither bed nor bedding, and their condition may well be imagined. To use the words of a seaman, who recently underwent his first experience of cutters in the Stag, "while in Gola Bay no leave was given, she pitched and tossed about just as bad as when she was at sea, and so crowded were we on board that it was really sickening."

We hear a good deal of dissatisfaction has been caused in the Royal Regiment of Artillery, at the decision of the new Deputy-Adjutant-General not to appoint to the Horse Artillery any officer who is within five years of his promotion.

Colonel A. W. Drayson, Royal Artillery, on the Unemployed List, is about to retire from the service, with the rank of Major-General.

The subject of "Barrack Damages" is one that has frequently been mooted, with a view to some inquiry or rectification, but is one that is always burked, in whose interests we will not presume to say. We make no charge against anybody, but simply state facts. To begin with: when the wooden huts at Aldershot were first built, it was, if we mistake not, estimated that they would last for some twelve years. These huts have been constructed since the year 1854, yet, although they have been reported over and over again as being uninhabitable—from wind, leakage, heat, rats, and other smaller animals who make night horrible—all that has been done has been to "patch them up." Roofs, it is true, have been tarred and tarpaulined, with the only result that in the summer the sun comes down so hot on them that the heat inside is unbearable. These annoyances to the unfortunate occupants of the huts are not so much the object of these remarks. What we desire to do is to ventilate the question as to the amount of money that has been charged to officers and men for "barrack damages," and to know in what manner this money has been expended. It is well known that the so-called "barrack damages" are charged over and over again, year after year, for the same "damages," which have never been repaired; that regiment after regiment occupying the same quarters is charged for the same "damages." These remarks refer, of course, with equal force to the other huts at Shorncliffe, the Curragh, &c.; but it is equally the case with the barracks generally in England, Ireland, and Scotland. It is clearly a severe charge on officers and men, that, although they are charged for repairing "damages," these "damages" are never made good. What we particularly wish to ask is, where is the money charged under these headings lodged, where and how is it expended, who audits the accounts, and where does it appear in the Estimates as received or expended? Within our own knowledge, on more than one occasion it has been suggested to Members of Parliament to ask questions on this subject, but the invariable answer is, that they must first, as a matter of etiquette, submit the question to the Secretary of State for War, who invariably requests that the question may not be put. In thus drawing attention to the subject, we feel that we shall be corroborated in our remarks by almost every officer in the service. We know full well how hard these charges fall on married soldiers, who can ill-afford to be mulcted.

It may prove interesting, as showing the good feeling which exists in social circles between Germany and England, that the late Colonel R. K. Macquoid, Madras S.C., who died at Freiburg on the 27th ult., and whose services were recorded in our last number, was granted a funeral with full military honours by General Von Berken and the officers of the 113th (5th Baden) Infantry. The little English colony in Freiburg thanked the General and officers for the honour paid to their countryman.

Lieutenant-Colonel G. W. Prior, Royal Scots, has been directed to visit all stations where there are tactical models, in order to alter these models, so as to adapt them to the method of playing war games laid down in General Order.

Commanding officers have been ordered to furnish reports on the working of G.O. 50 of 1883, "Military Training of Soldiers," which has now been a sufficient time in progress to judge of its effect on the organisation of the Army generally. It will probably be found necessary to make considerable change in the present mode of carrying out this annual training, much of which is exceedingly irksome and disagreeable to trained soldiers. A syllabus on the subject will shortly be issued.

The appointment of Deputy-Assistant-Adjutant-General at the School of Musketry will be vacant early in the year, as Major Marsden is about to retire.

A Pigeon Shooting Club, we notice from our Aldershot correspondent's letter, has been started at that station. After the action of H.R.H. the Princess of Wales in regard to Hurlingham, it is earnestly to be hoped that the members of the Aldershot Club will refrain from using live pigeons. A sport which has been declared to be "a most debased and cruel one," certainly is not one to be encouraged among the members of a noble profession.

It is reported the Clothing Factory at Pimlico has ready for issue, on April 1, a large quantity of the new grey "invisible clothing." We wonder what subordinate official is responsible for this gross expenditure, as Lord Hartington informed the House of Commons it was only "to be issued to a few regiments as an experiment."

It has been finally decided to establish a School of Instruction for Mounted Infantry at Aldershot.

We understand it has been decided to remove to the Unemployed List, on January 1, those officers of Artillery on the Indian Lists who have completed five years' service as Lieutenant-Colonels in their commands, and with regard to whom difficulties had arisen.

The steel chest-measuring tape which has been approved by the War Office, and is now being issued to medical officers employed in the duty of passing recruits, is, we understand, the invention of Major E. P. Wilford, 28th Regiment, Adjutant of the 3rd Battalion, Gloucester Regiment. The invention is a particularly valuable one, and we strongly recommend it to the notice of Volunteer commanding officers. It can be obtained of Messrs. Elliott, 449 Strand, W.C.

The forthcoming reduction of the force in Egypt will comprise the battery of Horse Artillery, one battery of Artillery, the 19th Hussars, and three battalions of Infantry. This will still leave three and a half battalions of Infantry and three batteries of Artillery in that country, or 3,000 men.

Major J. A. Fergusson, Rifle Brigade, has been selected for the appointment of Brigade-Major at Ceylon, and will not, therefore, stand for Parliament as he had intended.

The following moves of regiments have been arranged, and will shortly be carried out, viz.,—3rd Hussars, from Aldershot to Hounslow; 4th Hussars, Hounslow to Norwich; 7th Hussars, Colchester to Aldershot; 19th Hussars, Egypt to Colchester; 1st Battalion, 20th Foot, Templemore to Fermoy; 1st Battalion, 21st Foot, Dover to Aldershot; 2nd Battalion, 23rd Foot, Pembroke to Templemore; 37th Foot, Fermoy to Gosport; 59th Foot, Chatham to Dover; 66th Foot, Gosport to Chatham.

A Consultative Committee for the revision of the tables of transport and equipment for an Army Corps in the field has been formed. Colonel Harrison, C.B., C.M.G., A.Q.M.G., is president of this Committee.

We understand Lieutenant-Colonel Minto Elliot, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, succeeds Colonel Hughes, Royal Artillery, as Deputy Adjutant-General of Artillery in India. Colonel Hughes takes up the appointment of Inspector of Magazines and Warlike Stores in India.

It is believed, if the present system of enlistment is persevered with in the Infantry, the 43 battalions at home on the maximum establishment of 520 rank and file will have to be considerably increased. These battalions, after providing drafts for foreign service, at present are found useless for garrison purposes, or for the onerous duties in Ireland.

Whatever may be the results of the doubts and fears of the Government as regards the prolongation of our armed occupation in Egypt, there can be only one sentiment among the officers and men stationed there, when the time comes for their departure, as come, we believe, it must. After the novelty of the scenery and sights of Egypt is worn off, the life of a soldier in Alexandria and Cairo, such as it is in the force under Lieutenant-General Stephenson, is monotonous and unattractive. There are, moreover, positive discomforts, in the shape of multitudinous flies and musquitoes, and in the heat and dust which prevail exceedingly for the spring and summer. Campaigning, with or without the chill off, is always exciting,—now and then, too much so. But there can be no ennui in the ranks, above or below, of an army engaged en rare campagne. An Army of Occupation with nothing to do is the lowest expression of military force. It is certain that there will be no entire retreat from Egypt till the moderate expectations of Sir E. Baring are satisfied; and it is equally sure that there will be no annexation, actual or covert, if his views be accepted at home.

Many efforts are being made, though not always in the best way, to improve the shooting of the British soldier. Shooting-galleries for this laudable purpose are about to be erected at Aldershot, and a board of officers has been assembled to select and report on sites for these galleries.

Amongst the advertisements will be found one containing a list of the regiments which have already promised an annual subscription of £2 to the Endowment Fund of the Corps of Commissionaires. It will be in the recollection of our readers that the founder a month ago published an appeal to the regimental officers, calling their attention to the yearly deficiency in the income, causing a periodical drain upon the capital of the institution. To obviate this, he expressed a hope that each regiment or battalion would give an annual subscription, which, if acceded to, would produce an increase of £358 a year, and thus establish an equilibrium in the finances. We are glad to see that no less than 40 of the regiments stationed at home and four of those in the Mediterranean and Egypt have already favourably responded, and we have no doubt that the officers of that portion of her Majesty's forces quartered abroad will be equally liberal in their response to Captain Walter's invitation, when they are acquainted with the object he has in view.

Among the cases of wounds received in Egypt and recorded in the late Report of the Army Medical Department, one of the most remarkable is that of Private Robert Gaw, of the Scots Guards. This marvellously hard-headed man was shot in the side of the head at Tel-el-Kebir. He fell stunned, but soon recovered sufficiently to double after his regiment. The bullet fractured his skull, but the edge of the broken bone cut the bullet almost in two. In March last, the firmly-imbedded mass of lead was extracted with some difficulty. The use of chloroform was offered, but declined, with thanks we presume. Gaw bore the operation well, "and was greatly pleased with the result."

The recent promotion of a Staff Officer of Pensioners to the rank of Brevet Colonel brings to mind the reply of the Secretary of State to a query on the subject in the House of Commons during the last Session. As this promotion is made in direct contradiction of such answer, we certainly think that, taking into consideration the treatment that has been decreed by the Accountant-General to the Pension Staff, some explanation should be required from that official, for having put words into the mouth of the Secretary of State which, to use no harsher language, only had the effect of deceiving those who heard and those who read the reply.

Algerine, Com. A. G. Fullerton, has been ordered to proceed to Monte Video from the West Coast of Africa. All letters and parcels should be addressed care of her Majesty's Consul, Monte Video.

Boadicea, Capt. E. J. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Nowell Salmon, V.C., returned to Simon's Bay on Nov. 3 from Angra Pequena, on the West Coast of Africa, and reports that the firm of A. E. Luderitz, which recently received permission from the German Foreign Office to hoist the German flag at that place, now claims a considerable extent of territory and demands the payment of Customs duties. It is added that the representatives of the firm threatened to fire upon a schooner which refused to pay duties. The captain of the vessel, however, hoisted the British flag, and was allowed to depart without molestation. The German Government are sending a sloop to enquire into the matter.

Dido, Capt. Vander Meulen, having made a full and searching inquiry into the cause of the Haytian forts firing on the British merchant steamer Alps, has exacted an apology to the British Government, a salute to the British flag, and an indemnity of £600 to the company to which the ship belonged. These terms have been complied with. The protectorate of a strong country, probably of the United States or France, was talked of at Port-au-Prince, on Oct. 18. President Salomon's Government, it is said, is showing signs of weakness. He has not yet paid the final instalment of the price of the new war vessel, the Dessalines, which remains at Port-au-Prince under the American flag. The Philadelphian owners of the vessel threaten to bring her back unless the final payment (of 150,000 dols.) be soon made. Cazacles, the insurgent leader, is supported, it is believed, mainly by English capital, furnished through a banker at Curaçao.

Dryad, Com. Johnstone, was at the Mauritius on Oct. 10. A correspondent writes:—"Amongst the passengers recently brought by the Dryad from Madagascar was a Madame C., with five children, who gave birth during the voyage to Mauritius of a girl. Capt. Johnstone suggested that it should be called after the name of his ship. The mother acquiesced, and when the passengers were landed, Capt. Johnstone, having learned that she was in straitened circumstances, sent her 250 rupees for little Dryad, his god-daughter, and paid her expenses to her home inland. The Dryad brought a mail from Mahanooro for Europe, which is despatched by the French steamer leaving here to-day for Marseilles, viâ Aden." The Paris Gaulois states, on the faith of a telegram received from London, that the Dryad is to be replaced on the Madagascar station by another frigate, in deference to the susceptibilities of the French Government. Commenting on this rumour, the Temps remarks:—"Only lately the captain of the Dryad tried to give rise to another incident by accusing one of our despatch boats of assuming a threatening attitude, because it went through the ordinary manœuvres off the Ile des Prunes, where the Dryad was lying. It is probable that the relations between the officers of the two navies are very much strained at Tamatave. While exercising an undoubted right, namely, that of watching over her interests through the presence of men-of-war on the coast of Madagascar, England would adopt a measure which would speedily lead to a better state of feeling if she sent out a naval officer who had not been mixed up in the unfortunate dispute which arose between Capt. Johnstone and Admiral Galiber. The latter is so courteous and conciliatory that the officers of the two navies should certainly be as cordial at Madagascar as they are in every other part of the world."

Euryalus, Capt. Hastings, C.B., flagship of Rear-Admiral Sir William Hewett, V.C., arrived at Aden on Nov. 4, and will leave for Bombay on Nov. 8.

Himalaya, Capt. Palliser, arrived at Halifax on Nov. 6, and would leave on the 11th inst.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir John Commerell, V.C., will leave Halifax for Bermuda about Nov. 15. The Tenedos was at Halifax, refitting, on Oct. 26. The Canada left Halifax on Oct. 23, on passage to Bermuda; is to proceed to Barbadoes after a slight refit, as senior officer's ship. The Garnet was at Halifax on Oct. 26, and will proceed to Bermuda early in November. The Dido was at Jamaica on Sept. 25, with senior officer on the coast of Haiti, and will proceed to Barbadoes on being relieved by the Griffon. The Griffon was at Halifax on Oct. 24; would leave Charlotte Town on Oct. 27, and afterwards proceed to relieve the Dido at Haiti. The Flamingo left Halifax for Bermuda on Oct. 25. The Fantôme was at Jamaica on Sept. 25; general service on division; ordered to Bermuda. The Mallard was at Jamaica on Sept. 25; general service on division. The Foam was at Halifax; after completing refit about Oct. 31, would proceed to Jamaica Division.

Orontes, Capt. Andoe, left Cape Town on Nov. 3 for Mauritius.

Polyphemus, Com. May, has been ordered round to Chatham, according to the Times, to ship her new boilers. The Portsmouth Times, however, maintains that her fate is still uncertain:—"The Admiralty do not appear to know what to do with her, and they are accredited with the most contradictory intentions. At one time they are said to have been satisfied with her torpedo trials, and to have ordered her round to Chatham to receive new boilers; at another period they are reported to have directed supplementary experiments to be carried out, and to have accordingly delayed her departure, and then her early adieu to this port is definitely announced with quite an authoritative air. But here she still remains, and, as a matter of fact, nothing positive is at present known as to what is to become of her."

Serapis, Capt. Dupuis, arrived at Bombay on Nov. 6 from Portsmouth, viâ the Cape.

Sphinx, Com. Crawford Caffin, after leaving Sheerness last Friday for the Persian Gulf, went for a run on the measured mile, Maplin Sands, to test her machinery, when her indicators were found to be defective. As a thick bank of fog was rising, the pilot advised Com. Crawford Caffin to put back to Sheerness, in preference to going on to Portsmouth and adjusting the indicators at that port. On Saturday morning some mechanics from the engineering department of Sheerness Dockyard were despatched to the Sphinx to make good the defects, and in the evening the vessel left Sheerness for the Persian Gulf, where she will be stationed for the next four years as senior officer's ship. The Sphinx is fitted with a suit of cabins for the English Political Resident, and will be used for the conveyance of that official from port to port. The Sphinx being a new ship, the Admiralty directed her to undergo a few days' cruise in the English Channel prior to leaving this country. She arrived at Spithead on Nov. 5. She will call at Plymouth.

Swiftsure, Capt. Aitchison, flagship of Rear-Admiral Lyons, with the Sappho in company, arrived at Acapulco on Nov. 4, and would leave at once for Panama. The squadron is ordered to assemble at Callao on Dec. 15, for a cruise. The Constance was at Callao on Aug. 24, conducting duties of senior officer on southern division; ordered to meet flagship at Callao on Dec. 15. The Satellite, at Coquimbo on Oct. 2, the Mutine, at Callao on Oct. 6, and the Kingfisher, at Coquimbo on July 19, have been ordered to meet flag at Callao on Dec. 15. The Sappho was at San Francisco, and would accompany flagship. The Daily British Colonist (Victoria, British Columbia), of Oct. 9, says:—"The departure to-day of the flagship Swiftsure and the corvette Sappho is the occasion for general regret among our citizens at losing for an indefinite period the society of the officers and crews of the above vessels, who have become more popular, if possible, than were those of the Triumph. A very pleasant feature of their stay of six months was the naval review given at Beacon Hill; and none proved themselves more ready than these gallant seamen in aiding deserving charities by amateur dramatic performances. Passing friendships, and others that may prove more lasting, have been formed, and we feel certain have been productive of mutual pleasure. Mingled with the ideas (some of them very tender ones) will be a conviction that in some cases they are final. This will probably be the case with the gallant commander of the fleet, Admiral Lyons, who, it is expected, will shortly meet with deserved promotion. In after-times, when conjuring up pleasant reminiscences of their stay at Vancouver Island, there will also be recalled the sorrowful episode of the untimely end of poor Lieut. Lees. Victorians send after the departing ships every wish for future prosperity as they journey to other lands under the Union Jack, which has floated over every ocean and in every land, proudly waving in the zephyrs of prosperity, nailed to the mast in the adverse gales of fortune, carrying over the raging billow and the placid calm the assurance of protection for the oppressed, freedom for the slave, and justice for all. So leave this station the Swiftsure and Sappho, armour-plated bulwarks of defence, manned by stout and loyal hearts, ever ready to die in defence of the great and glorious nation to which they belong." The funeral of Lieut. Lees took place on Oct. 7. The cortége was headed by a detachment of Royal Marines, under Capt. H. D. Robinson, followed by the band, with first-class petty officers in charge of the coffin and gunners' mates on the drag-ropes. The pall-bearers were Lieuts. E. G. Shortland, Hon. A. E. Bethell, A. L. K. Knapton, A. Evan-Thomas, P. G. Vander Byl, and J. H. Henderson. The mourners were Engineer T. Rule, Assist.-Pymr. Henry Dawson, Surgs. H. L. Crocker and G. F. Wales, Chief Engineer C. M. Johnson, Pymr. C. B. L. Brockman, Fleet Surg. R. H. More, Staff Com. J. Robertson, Capt. H. C. Aitchison, and Staff Surg. C. Harvey. Behind them walked officers and Blue-jackets of H.M.'s ships Sappho, Heroine, and Swiftsure, Lieut.-Col. Holmes, C.A., A.D.A.G., and other Military officers, Rear-Admiral Algernon McL. Lyons, Mr. D. Cartmel, Chief Engineer of Naval Yard, Capt. F. R. Blackburn, Com. B. T. Clark, Mr. G. Liddell (secretary), and other officers. The service was read by the Revs. J. de Glenville and G. H. Marwood, the grave being near that of the late Governor Seymour. The funeral was one of the largest ever held at Victoria. A correspondent, referring to the frightful accident which befell Lieut. Lees, writes:—"But little hope was entertained of his recovery from the first, and on Thursday, Oct. 4, he passed away, the accident having occurred on the previous Saturday. From the little light the deceased was able to throw on the matter, the accident would appear to have been a most melancholy one. He was understood to say that in the dark he drove right into the ditch, he himself being pitched out on the grass on its opposite side, quite unhurt. He then seized hold of the horse's bridle, with the idea of helping him to get out, when the frightened animal reared madly, and with one of its fore feet inflicted fatal injuries on the ill-fated officer."

NAVAL NOTES.

The Admiralty have awarded the naval pension of £65 a year for commanders, vacant by the death of Retired Captain W. H. Bridge, to Retired Captain E. A. Glynn, from Oct. 11. This officer served in the Fair Rosamond, Curlew, and Cygnet on the West Coast of Africa, and was Lieut.-Com. of the Dart at the capture of a felucca after a severe fight in the boats of that ship and of the Philomel. Also the naval pension of £50 a year for lieutenants, vacant by the death of Retired Commander Thomas Lavington, to Retired Commander John J. Martin, from Oct. 1.

A correspondent writes that the Belleisle was inspected on Oct. 25 by Sir Anthony H. Hoskins, at Carrickfergus, county Antrim, Ireland. The inspection was very satisfactory. The Belleisle has been in the open and exposed roadstead since Oct. 13, and is to remain until Nov. 15. No visitors go to the ship, in consequence of the lateness of the season and the distance the ship is from the shore. The Belleisle has only been 35 days in Kingstown during the last eight months, and this is what is called a home ship!

The deaths of the following officers have been officially reported at the Admiralty since Sept. 20:—Coms. Dashwood G. Tandy and Herbert Dolphin, Lieut. Hastings R. Lees, and Chief Engineers John W. Nott and Henry Scott. The names of the following officers have been removed from the Active List of the Navy:—Acting Sub-Lieut. Fred. D. Thoroton (resigned) and Edmund H. Thruston (withdrawn). The following warrant officers have been pensioned:—Gunners Charles Dyer, Joseph Higgins, and Edward G. Birch; Boatswains Thomas Parramore and Alexander McKenzie.

The Ghelendjick, which is being constructed for the Russian Admiralty at La Seyne, near Marseilles, is a torpedo vessel of an entirely novel type, being so designed that it will be able to take the water anywhere instead of being placed, as these torpedo-boats hitherto have been, on board large vessels until the moment of action arrives. It will be 120 ft. long by 13 ft. broad, and will carry engines of 600 horse-power, with a steel screw, and with a speed of 19 knots an hour. It will carry four Whitehead torpedoes and two Hotchkiss guns; the deck will be only just above the floating line, and the crew will be quartered below, while, for the protection of the men who may be called by their services above, a strong steel chain will be passed along the sides for them to lay hold on by. The Russian Admiralty has sent Capt. Routschewski, one of the most distinguished officers in the Navy, who is aide-de-camp to the Grand Duke Constantine, to superintend the construction of the Ghelendjick, which derives its name from one of the Russian forts on the shores of the Black Sea.

William Coles, steward, and Thomas Merit, private, R.M.L.I., of the Victoria and Albert, have been awarded the medal for long service and good conduct.

We learn from Sebastopol that last week 300 hands were taken on by the authorities to construct the second of the two ironclads sanctioned by the Russian Admiralty. Both the Sinope and the Tchesme are ordered to be well advanced by this time next year, and a bonus will be granted if completed before the date contracted. The third ironclad, the Catherine the Great, is being rapidly pushed on with at Nicolaeff. At Sebastopol will shortly arrive the second and third of the new ocean liners, built on the Tyne for the Black Sea Steam Navigation Company, and destined to serve as transports in time of war. The Tsarevna has already been running to Batoum for some time past; the Tsar and Tsaritsa will join it before the close of the year. These vessels are 332 ft. long, 37 ft. broad, 27 ft. deep, and have a speed of 16 knots. They cost £60,000 apiece.

The Admiralty propose to grant supplementary votes to the principal dockyards to enable their armoured shipbuilding programme to be carried out, and if possible exceeded during the current financial year. The replacement of the obsolete vessels of the Channel Squadron by battle ships of recent type and the commissioning of others for training and evolutionary purposes, are under official consideration. Plans are being prepared at Whitehall of an armour-clad that will, it is understood, represent novel features of offensive and defensive strength.

INDIAN TROOPSHIPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—In reference to your statements respecting the unpopularity of the Indian troopships, I wish to make one observation, which, being based on actual knowledge of the facts, should, I think, set the writer inquiring into other facts he has adduced with respect to them. The Admiralty are deluged with applications from Naval officers for appointments to the troopers; and the posts open to executive officers on board them could be filled three times over, so numerous are the applicants. That does not look like "unpopularity," at all events. The Admiralty are so well satisfied with the present system, that they are not going to make any change in it in respect to officering or manning whatever.—I am, &c.,

THE ELEMENTS OF MILITARY ADMINISTRATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Although, no doubt, it is allowable in criticising a book, to reproduce a sentence taken from it in a form changed so as to make the words convey the impression they have produced upon the critic, it is certainly unjustifiable to present it in this changed form as a quotation of words used by the author. I therefore beg to call your attention to the fact that in your last issue appears a review of the book on "The Elements of Military Administration," which I wrote for Colonel Brackenbury (or rather a résumé of my last chapter), in which the reviewer puts in inverted commas the sentence I give below. He alludes to my programme as one "which is to confer upon the Minister who carries out the leading features of its policy the reward of being regarded as the Scharnhorst of England." These words are not mine. Nowhere do I speak of "conferring rewards" upon Ministers. The credit of having invented this smart sentence belongs entirely to your reviewer, and he is, of course, free to use it as his own, if he wishes to do so; but I strongly object to such words being saddled upon me by his enclosing them in quotation marks. Here is the original sentence:—"Enough for us that we see in this the straight course, and that we believe that the Minister who carries out the leading features of this policy will one day be recognised as the Scharnhorst of England." Although I have the misfortune to differ on many points from some of the views on organisation which I have seen editorially advocated in the Army and Navy Gazette, I cannot suppose that you would willingly misrepresent what I have written, and what I certainly believe; and therefore I feel sure that you will consider it but common justice to me, and due also to yourself, to publish this letter as conspicuously as the misrepresentation.—I am, &c.,

J. W. BUXTON, Major, Royal Inniskilling Fusiliers.

Seventeen seamen drafted from the harbour ships were sent by train on Sunday to Liverpool, to embark in the mail steamer Haytian for ships on the Pacific station.

HOW TO AVOID THE INJURIOUS EFFECTS OF STIMULANTS. —The present system of living—partaking of too rich foods, as pastry, saccharine and fatty substances, alcoholic drinks, and an insufficient amount of exercise—frequently deranges the liver. I would advise all bilious people, unless they are careful to keep the liver acting freely, to exercise great care in the use of alcoholic drinks, avoid sugar, and always dilute largely with water. Experience shows that porter, mild ales, port wine, dark sherries, sweet champagne, liqueurs, and brandies, are all very apt to disagree; while light white wines, and gin or old whisky largely diluted with soda water, will be found the least objectionable. ENO'S FRUIT SALT is peculiarly adapted for any constitutional weakness of the liver; it possesses the powers of reparation when digestion has been disturbed or lost, and places the invalid on the right track to health. A world of woes is avoided by those who keep and use ENO'S FRUIT SALT, therefore no family should ever be without it. CAUTION.—Legal Rights are protected in every Civilised Country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed on by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions, in Sixteen Languages, how to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S Fruit Salt Works, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

London Amusements.

No novelty has been produced at any of the theatres during the past week, and, generally speaking, the present programmes seem to be sufficiently attractive. At the COVENT GARDEN Promenade Concerts, the "Inkerman Night" was on Monday evening associated as usual with military music; and another special grand concert is to be given with Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley, Madame Enriquez, and Madame Rose Hersee among the vocalists.

At the West-End houses, the present popular attractions render unnecessary any immediate change of the play-bill, but the lengthy career of "The Silver King" at the PRINCESS'S will not be prolonged beyond the present month.

The ROYALTY is closed till the middle of next week to allow of the requisite preparations for the production of Audran's comic opera, "Gillette de Narbonne," produced last November at the Bouffés Parisiens, and derived from an old vaudeville founded on a familiar story in Boccaccio's "Decameron."

A morning performance of the comedy of "Ours" was given at TOOLE'S THEATRE on Friday, being Lord Mayor's day.

With this week Mr. George Grossmith adds to the attraction of "Iolanthe," at the SAVOY, his clever drawing-room sketch of "The Drama on Crutches."

It seems now finally settled that the extensive premises on the north side of Leicester Square, intended to be opened by "the Pandora Theatre Company" as a place of amusement, will be converted into another palatial restaurant. It is understood that the purchaser of the lease is Mr. Nicol, who, some 14 years ago, established the Café Royal, in Regent Street.

The recent decease of Lord Gardner will remind old playgoers of the then charming young actress, Miss Julia Fortescue, who became that nobleman's second wife in 1848. Her first appearance was at Covent Garden Theatre, June 7, 1825, when, in her ninth year, she sustained the boy-part of Edward in the old comedy, "Every One has His Faults." When the first speaking pantomime of "Harlequin Pat and Harlequin Bat" was produced at Covent Garden on the Boxing Night of 1830, Miss Fortescue represented the Genius of Pantomime, and Miss Priscilla Horton (now Mrs. German Reed) made her début as the little Fairy Queen, Mealy Moth. A dozen years afterwards, when an early dramatic version of "Barnaby Rudge" was produced at the Lyceum, Miss Julia Fortescue was selected by the manager to represent Barnaby, and the great novelist was wont to declare that never had one of his characters been so satisfactorily transferred to the stage. Her retirement from the profession, adorned alike by her talents and her virtues, took place a few months before her marriage with Lord Gardner.

Miss Lucille Meredith makes her first appearance in this country at the GAIETY THEATRE, at a matinée on Thursday next, in the character of Phoebe, in Stephen's and Solomon's nautical comic opera, "Billee Taylor." The young lady possesses an exceptionally clear soprano voice, and comes to us from America with a reputation of no inferior description.

Owing to the pressure of work at Sheerness in preparing the Caroline, Myrmidon, and Turquoise for sea, the work on the Ruby, which was ordered to be taken in hand at once, has been postponed till the next financial year. The Goshawk has been placed on the list of vessels ready for the pendant, and will be commissioned at an early date, but her destination is not finally decided upon.

Obituary.

Pymr. James B. E. Soden, R.N., one of the few survivors of the battle of Algiers, died on Monday at his residence, Sutton, Surrey, aged 90. Mr. Soden was clerk of the Granicus at the battle of Algiers, which was fought in August, 1816, for which he received the medal, and was purser of the Etna, bomb-vessel, at the bombardment of the Castle Morea in co-operation with the French.

A court-martial assembled on board the Royal Adelaide, flagship, on Monday, for the trial of Cornelius Desmond, private in the Portsmouth Division Royal Marines, serving in the Achilles, for striking his superior officer. The prisoner was brought before Capt. Beresford, R.M.A., for being drunk, and after the inquiry he was led away by Serjt. John Evans to the cells. On reaching there, he suddenly turned round, and struck Evans heavily in the left ear with his clenched fist. The prisoner was sentenced to two years' hard labour, his character having previously been good. The same court sat to try an able seaman of the same ship, named Gordon Agnew, for gross acts of insubordination. On the 13th ult., when the lower deck was cleared, the prisoner was discovered asleep in the sail-room. He was taken before the officer of the watch, and ordered to be reported. Shortly afterwards, the corporal, named Harber, who made the complaint, was sitting at mess, when the prisoner came aft and said, "I suppose you are one of the educated Navy men. If I was like you, I would cut my throat." The prisoner was ordered to leave, and rushed away from the escort. When brought to bay, he clutched Harber, made desperate attempts to strike him, and threatened to hang for him. Subsequently he jumped overboard, and tried to escape by swimming ashore. The prisoner, who wears Ashantee and Egyptian medals, but bore a general bad character, was sentenced to one year's imprisonment, and discharged from the service.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—For the cure of burns, scalds, wounds, and ulcers, this justly celebrated Ointment stands unrivalled. Its balsamic virtues, immediately on application, lull the pain and smarting, protect the exposed nerves from the air, give to the vessels the vigour necessary to heal the sore, and confer on the blood a purity which permits it only to lay down healthy flesh in place of that destroyed. Holloway's Pills, simultaneously taken, must assist the Ointment's purifying and soothing power. Together, these medicines act like a charm; no invalid, after a fair trial, has found them fail to relieve his pain or completely cure his disease. The combined action of the Ointment and Pills in all disorders is too irresistible to be withstood.

The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S

ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE. CHLORODYNE.

From SYMES and Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Medical Hall, Simla, January 5, 1881. To J. T. DAVENPORT, Esq., 33 Great Russell Street, Bloomsbury, London.

Dear Sir,—We embrace this opportunity of congratulating you upon the wide-spread reputation this justly esteemed medicine, Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne, has earned for itself, not only in Hindostan, but all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported into the country, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES and Co., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a Liquid Medicine which assuages Pain of every kind, affords a calm, refreshing sleep without Headache, and invigorates the Nervous System when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff), discovered a remedy to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE.

The General Board of Health, London, report that it acts as a charm, one dose generally sufficient.

Dr. Gibbon, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states:—"Two doses completely cured me of Diarrhœa."

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of

COUGHS, ASTHMA, COLDS,
BRONCHITIS,
EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA, and is the true Palliative in NEURALGIA, GOUT,
CANCER,
TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
GREAT SPECIFIC for
DIARRHŒA,
CHOLERA, DYSENTERY.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.

The immense sale of this remedy has given rise to many unscrupulous imitations.

N.B.—Every bottle of genuine Chlorodyne bears on the Government stamp the name of the inventor,

THE leading journal gave us on Tuesday last the benefit of its views as to what is to be done to redeem the British Army from the chaos into which it has been brought, as the result of thirteen years of vigorous reform. In every line of the Times article there is evidence of inspiration, not that honest inspiration which simply tells of things that are to be; but inspiration the aim and object of which are to gloss over unpleasant truths. The Times starts by referring to Lord Hartington's speech at the Guildhall on Friday last, when his Lordship drew attention to the great difficulty which is experienced in working the Short-service system in an army which is called upon to perform varied duties in all quarters of the globe. Lord Hartington has given us assurance that this important question is not to be any longer in abeyance; that the present period of peace and tranquillity being eminently favourable to the settlement of this and other Military problems, he intends to devote himself to modify existing regulations so as to render Short Service workable, by a virtual return to long-service enlistment. In other words, Lord Hartington has avowed that the pessimists, whom the Times for years condemned with a vehemence which bordered on fanaticism, were right in objecting to the mad "fad" of unmixed short service, which was to confer upon the British Army benefits, not one of which has yet been realised, notwithstanding the chopping and changing that have gone on, and the many devices to which successive War Ministers have been obliged to have recourse. Not a word is said, of course, by the Times of those who foretold the difficulties which rendered this reshuffling of the cards imperative. "The programme of Military reforms shadowed forth some dozen years ago is not merely unfinished; it is, in some respects, unwritten." So we are told by the organ of the reformers. The information will scarcely have the effect of easing the Military mind, and yet it is of a nature to cause satisfaction for every step which is taken in the direction of reform now must be a step backwards, and bring us nearer to the point from which we started. "Military men would have us believe that the Army has been harassed and wants rest," the Times goes on to say. It surely is not necessary for "military men" to tell us this; the fact is evident. The reformers have emulated the example of Dick Turpin, with the same result. Their faithful horse, represented by the much reviled regimental officer, has carried them until he has broken down at length from want of rest and nourishment; and it is not until they see his almost lifeless carcase they recognise the mischief they have wrought. The British Army has, indeed, been harassed. It has been so much harassed that it is now little better than a shadow of its former self. Right loyally have all ranks striven to do their duty, and support the credit of the noble profession in which they are enrolled. But praiseworthy as has been their devotion, they have failed, for the simple reason that success was impossible. Instead, however, of acknowledging, in a generous spirit, the untenable nature of the position, there are not wanting indications that Lord Hartington is being influenced by those about him to follow the same course as his predecessors have done, viz., drive the Army before him. The voice of the Army has been systematically ignored for thirteen years. The whole tenure of the Times' article shows unmistakably the existence of a strong and not unnatural desire to resist by all means, legitimate or illegitimate, any curtailment of the powers assumed by a certain clique at the War Office, which is directly responsible for everything that has gone wrong—and, alas! what has not gone wrong?—in the Army since 1870. "The struggle against this wall of prejudice" (social and professional influences) "is delicate and formidable, and none but those possessing dogged strength and resolution can be expected to maintain the thankless and wearying contest," says the Times. But there is another and far more dangerous struggle, of which no account is taken, the struggle which the Army has to make against those who have been for years past engaged in heaping upon it indignity. It is scarcely necessary for us here to recall the language used by a journal of the position and influence of the Times, in regard to regimental officers. To be sure, the attacks have ceased of late, but it is only due to the devotion and gallantry of those who served with their regiments in Egypt that this has been brought about. Even on Tuesday our contemporary could not wind up its remarks without one thrust at those whom it has been the invariable custom to make responsible for every evil. "As we can keep the Army fully manned," it is observed, "only by making it popular, it is time that we should seriously consider the question of making the command of a regiment—the most influential position in the service, for good or evil—a special appointment, to be filled only by men of exceptional qualifications, instead of a post attainable by any service drone or dullard with nothing against him. We can no longer treat the soldier as a machine, with no business to think for himself. Officers must be selected who are likely to govern successfully the greatly improved element now largely represented in the ranks. And before this feeling, the Club feeling and social influences which have been hitherto dominant must bend." We have no doubt but that these expressions of righteous indignation at the favour with which, to use the elegant language of the Times, "drones and dullards" have been treated, will have its effect, in inducing persons uninitiated in Army administration to think that the indictment against the Military element is reasonable. Fortunately, however, there are so many Englishmen now who have acquired a taste for soldiering, through their connection with the Militia, Yeomanry, and Volunteers, and who are able, in consequence, to think for themselves, that such criticism will fail to produce the hoped-for effect. If "drones and dullards" still attain to the higher ranks, what, it will naturally be asked, has become of the promises of Lord Cardwell, and of those who involved the country in so vast an expense to abolish Purchase? The Secretary of State for War is all-powerful. How comes it that he allows these "drones and dullards" to be entrusted with command? It is thirteen years since Purchase disappeared. In the period which has elapsed since the new system came in, something surely might have been done to put a stop to the advancement of men of notorious incapacity. But if the truth were known, it would be found that there is a hidden meaning in the words we have quoted, and in another place we have dealt with the panacea which is suggested by our contemporary. It cannot be a consoling reflection for the Army to feel that its interests are subservient to the aims of any politician who may happen to hold office as Secretary of State for War; that any changes introduced must be in accord with the views of civilian officials; in fact, that the Army is being made an instrument for political purposes. Yet that this is the case, the recent utterances of the Times place beyond doubt.

THE state of the Militia is thoroughly unsatisfactory; there is apathy, unrebuked, among the idle and indifferent; there is discouragement, amounting almost to despair, among the zealous. And the causes are not far to seek. Very few know, still fewer seem to care, about the Militia. It has not the prestige of the Line, it has no share in that popular sympathy so freely given to the Volunteers. And why? Because it occupies now very much the same unfortunate position that the Army did in the long interval between the Peninsular and the Crimean Wars. It is hid away in corners out of sight; it is never alluded to by public speakers; it is treated as though it were something to be ashamed of and to apologise for. And so it has lost touch with the country, and lost confidence in itself. The Militia officer is accused of lack of zeal. How should he be zealous? He knows well that no amount of zeal or of indolence will either promote or retard his advancement, or bring him credit or discredit; he knows that such honours and rewards as are open to the Militia are distributed with a sole regard for paper seniority or high social position. Not for him are the royal reviews, or manœuvres, or such gatherings as those of Wimbledon or Shoeburyness. Year after year he has to plod through the same formal training, on the same ground, ending with the same stock inspection. It is, probably, safe to say that three-fourths of our Militia battalions have never during the last five-and-twenty years had a chance of seeing their Sovereign or any member of her family, or the Commander-in-Chief, or have been exercised in brigade either with the Line or with other Militia battalions. What wonder, if this stagnant condition has brought with it decay of spirit, and a noxious growth of indifference and skulking? The Militia, there is too much reason to fear, is choking for want of the free air of public opinion. Bring it into the light of day; assemble it in brigades and divisions, where it can be seen, where idleness and incompetence will be detected, criticised, punished, where zeal may have some chance of being recognised. and we shall soon find a stirring among the dry bones. Knowing the Militia well, we can with confidence assert that it contains splendid material, both in officers and men. But it stands in crying need of reform, and it must be reformed, not by changes of lace and buttons, by fancy titles, by the bestowal of stars and honours, but by treating it as a reality; by giving it the chances which it altogether lacks now of learning something beyond the bare routine of elementary drill, by insisting on a high standard of efficiency, and by giving fair credit for it, when attained. This is the base upon which we desire to see the Militia reformed. A brand-new title, a Fusilier's cap, or a rifle tunic may please the vanity of a few men who cannot rise beyond the level of tailors' models; but shallow benefits such as these can have no effect in increasing the efficiency of the force, or even raising it in the estimation of the public. The Militia is undoubtedly a most valuable auxiliary. This fact has been proved beyond doubt, by its services in the past. But it may be wanted again, and when next it is embodied, it may be under very different circumstances. It will not be the fault of the service itself if it is found unequal to the work required of it, but of those who have been satisfied to let a good plant run to seed. That it is running to seed now, its best friends and admirers openly admit, the reason being that there is no encouragement given to any Militiaman to do anything beyond the bare routine of duty. Human nature is human nature, all the world over. If a man, whatever his walk in life may be, has to labour on year after year, making no headway and getting no recognition, that man will be bound to lose heart in time, become lukewarm, and eventually lose all interest in his work. This is the case with many of our most earnest Militia officers. They have simply lost confidence in the powers that be, because they see how one-sided the bargain is. They have played their part loyally, but others do not play theirs towards them. It is fully time that this official neglect ceased. If the Militia is worth keeping up at all, it is worth making efficient. It is not at present in that state in which it ought to be. It is not the fault of the service itself that this is so, but of those who are in office. It is for the War Office to inaugurate a new era, and if they could but be induced to do so, we have no doubt but that Militia officers throughout the country would willingly do their part, and assist in raising the service to a higher and more dignified position than ever it has held before. We have been accused by some of being unfriendly to the Militia, and of desiring to see the service snuffed out. But we know too well the importance of the services rendered by the force in the past, and we appreciate too fully the sacrifices that are made by officers and men, to under-rate the value of such an auxiliary. What we have all along desired to do, and what we desire still, is to see the Militia rendered really efficient, not by the granting of concessions which are of imaginary benefit only, but by the establishment of the service on a firm footing. No one who has any experience of the Militia can be satisfied with matters as they are. The service is only kept alive by the enthusiasm of the few. What is wanted is an organisation that will give the force a vitality that it does not at present possess, and that organisation must be provided if the Militia as a service is to continue to be a reality. At present, thanks to the latest fad of the reformers, Territorialism, all the old life is gradually being taken from it. If this process continues for a year or two longer, nothing but a skeleton will remain—as the result of a system which, whilst professing to elevate, has really lowered the Militia, and promises to render the maintenance of the force under existing regulations an impossibility.

IT is a law in the Army that as soon as possible after the arrival of a regiment in a new station, the commanding officer shall cause the credit of his corps to be "cried down." Failing to do so, he is liable to suffer certain pains and penalties. The custom of "crying-down credit" is as "old as the hills," so to speak, yet in how many instances has it any deterring effect as regards either soldiers or civilians? For all the real good the system is, it might well be considered—to use a Gladstonian phrase—"ancient history." It should be an understood thing by tradespeople that if they give credit to unauthorised soldiers, they do so at their own risk. As evidence of the pernicious effect of the credit system, we may draw attention to the case of a regiment which was quartered three years ago in one of the towns included in the South-Eastern command. A detachment of this corps was stationed a few miles distant from head-quarters, and the non-commissioned officers received permission to start a "scratch," not to emulate the regular regimental mess, but that the serjeants should have a place in which to take their meals, and meet for social intercourse, instead of living with the privates in their barrack-rooms. The serjeants of other detachments of different regiments were permitted to be "honorary members" of this temporary mess. A serjeant was appointed superintendent and general factotum. Within three months after the formation of this mess, the regiment received orders for foreign service, and a week before it embarked, bills to the amount of nearly £45 were sent in to the commanding officer for payment. Of course, the commanding officer refused to pay them, and repudiated all responsibility, knowing that the credit of his corps had been cried down. He nevertheless made full inquiries, and the result was the placing in arrest of the serjeant in charge of the mess, for having made away with the money with which he should have paid the bills. The tradespeople appealed to the General, and then to the Commander-in-Chief, the result being that a correspondence was kept up for the best portion of three years, with the final result that the serjeants' mess paid one half, and the commanding officer, out of his own pocket, the other half. The offending serjeant, who subsequently proved himself to be a thorough blackguard, went scot-free, save being reduced to the ranks, although he had an accumulation of pay due to him of upwards of two hundred rupees, and he refused to assist in the payment of the bills, and there was no law to compel him to do so. The tradespeople in question seem to have taken no trouble to ascertain before supplying the goods whether the serjeant had any authority for ordering them, neither did they make any complaint to the commanding officer when they found their monthly accounts were not paid. It is no uncommon practice for tradespeople to give unlimited credit to soldiers, trusting entirely to the officers to pay up, "if the worst comes to the worst," to save the credit of the regiment. Now, if the system of "crying-down credit" is to be persisted in, offending tradespeople should have no claims for compensation, if bills are not paid. The commanding officer of a regiment should receive the support of the heads of the Army; and the General officer in command of a district should refuse to forward or in any way recognise any complaints against soldiers, on account of debts illegally contracted. The officers of a regiment should be protected, and not punished for the evil-doings of some few blackguards of a regiment.

THE Admiralty having sanctioned the publication of the correspondence relating to the case of Lieutenant Conway-Gordon, R.M.A., the father of that officer has forwarded to us copies of all the letters which have passed between him and the Secretary of the Admiralty. We extract the last two letters, as embodying the whole case. Lieutenant Conway-Gordon had passed an examination in which Lieutenants Slessor and Cox had failed. Lieutenant Conway-Gordon thus won for himself a position in the Royal Marine Artillery which Lieutenants Slessor and Cox lost. True, the system at the Royal Naval College might be more to blame than the probationers who failed to qualify under it. But he who succeeded was surely deserving of the position he had won. To repudiate his claims, and to act on the principle "the last shall be first," without warning either probationers or parents, was a clear breach of faith. We cannot suppose that the Admiralty have been influenced in any way by the fact that the father of one of the disqualified probationers, whom they have advanced over the head of the one who qualified, is the head of one of the Departments. Lord Northbrook has admitted, to the Deputy-Lieutenant for the County of Lincoln, that his son "was sustaining an apparent hardship," and that his supersession was contrary to the recommendation and advice of the Deputy-Adjutant-General of the Marine Forces. Sir Thomas Brassey, M.P., has stated in the House of Commons that Lieutenant Conway-Gordon has sustained "a slight disadvantage." Their Lordships, in a letter dated August 24, 1883, confessed that their act has placed him in "a slightly worse position" than he was entitled to from his application while at the Royal Naval College, by which he had won for himself the position lost by Lieutenants Slessor and Cox, on the List of Subalterns of the Royal Marine Artillery. Nevertheless, their Lordships have persisted in perpetuating a wrong which could have been easily avoided, and can still be remedied, by the request of Lieutenant-Colonel Conway-Gordon being acceded to. This was, that the Lords of the Admiralty should issue "a memorandum, giving my son a position, regimentally, senior to Lieutenants Slessor and Cox, whilst allowing those officers to retain their present rank for Army purposes." In this manner, the "public interest," so jealously guarded by their Lordships, would have been maintained, and justice would have been accorded to a zealous and deserving young officer.

WHEN the Crimean War broke out, the Navy was strong in ships. Our Fleet was numerically and otherwise the most powerful of the world. Both in steam line-of-battle ships and frigates we were ahead of all Powers. But we wanted seamen to man our ships. Naval officers had to contemplate the possibility of having to take their ships into action not only undermanned, but manned with untrained seamen and undeveloped landsmen. That is to say, thirty years ago there was a sufficiency of ships-of-war, but a scarcity of seamen. The Admiralty of that day had foreseen this, but could not prevail on the Treasury to move in the matter, and grant the money which might have enabled them, even at the last moment, to remedy the defect. However, the lamentable results that might have ensued from this want of foresight was made so apparent to the Government on the outbreak of hostilities, that they at once set to work to repair the evil effects of their supineness. The continuous-service system was established; boys were entered in great numbers and trained; the Coastguard was transferred to the Admiralty, who replaced civilians with men-of-war's men; and finally, a Reserve of merchant seamen was established, who are now in a fair way to become trained gunners,—in fact, the Reserve of seamen may now be considered equal to any emergency. But history repeats itself; and now, in the event of war, we should find ourselves not in the want of trained seamen wherewith to man our ships, but of ships in which to place our trained seamen, for the purpose of maintaining our squadrons at a normal war strength. It does not require any special Naval knowledge to know, that in these days of torpedoes and ironclad rams, even victories might render such a result necessary, which in the case of a defeat would still further intensify the necessity. Many of the Fleet ships now in commission are undoubtedly out of date; and those who are behind the scenes know perfectly well that of the nine ships which composed the First Reserve Squadron this year, splendidly manned as they were, and as they can be within forty-eight hours' notice by the Coastguard men and First Reserve, only two of those vessels are such as could be sent into action. It is of vital moment that a squadron of such importance should always be available for home defence, and should be composed of vessels specially adapted for coast defence. No efforts should be spared until we can claim to have a real and efficient Reserve Squadron, to which we may entrust the defence of our shores from invasion. For the seizure of the Suez Canal, and for carrying out the Naval operations in Egyptian waters, it was found necessary to so increase our Fleet in the Mediterranean, by ships from the Channel and First Reserve Squadrons, that our shores were left practically undefended; and in this instance there were no hostile fleets to contend with. If this matter be put before the public in a proper manner, it is impossible to suppose that there would be any real opposition to a sum of money being voted, specially devoted to the construction of a First Reserve Squadron, whose duties should wholly and solely be for the coast defence of Great Britain. This sum of money should be distinct and separate from the ordinary Naval Estimates, and on no account whatever be diverted from its particular object. As regards the class of vessels to be constructed, they should have a draught of water of not over 24 ft., in order that they could be taken into all our principal ports. They should be mastless, for when manœuvring in peace time under steam, sails are useless; and the coal saved when there is a fair wind is more than counterbalanced by the increased consumption of coals when steaming against a foul wind, by reason of the resistance of the masts, yards, and rigging. Further, the weight of the masts and attendant gear, which in large ships is considerable, might with advantage be applied to increasing the weight of the armour or of the guns carried by these vessels. Then it is but a waste of time to attempt to make smart seamen of the First Reserve, or to drill the Coastguard men aloft, during their short annual cruise. In the former case, no benefit can accrue from the performance of smart evolutions aloft; and in the latter case, the men are old, well drilled men-of-war's men, of an average age of forty, who certainly can gain naught by such exercises. The whole of the short time these men are embarked for their annual cruise should be entirely devoted to making them smart and efficient gunners, and the rapid strides daily made in the science of naval gunnery necessitates every spare moment being used to enable this important force being made proficient in gunnery details. The ships of the Reserve Squadron should be of as great structural strength as is compatible with their requirements; their guns should be well protected, for the ships of this Squadron may have to meet the most powerful ironclads of the enemy. Torpedo-boat attacks will be a principal factor in offensive operations against this Squadron, and therefore the ships should be made unsinkable. It must be borne in mind that, in the event of our becoming involved in a European war, the safety of our homes will depend on the power of our Reserve Squadron, for a serious disaster to that Fleet would most probably place our shores at the mercy of an invading force, all the remainder of our Navy being employed far away from home.

The First Lord of the Admiralty spoke on behalf of the Navy on Tuesday at Bristol. We fail to comprehend how "the Navy of England rests mainly upon the Mercantile Marine for its chief support. If a war should break out, the merchant steamers of England would take their place in the line-of-battle, not, perhaps, in the great conflicts of the Fleets, but in the many minor Naval actions which must take place alongside the Fleet of the Crown, and with the same prowess that they did in past times." Lord Northbrook forgets that English merchant steamers are now-a-days manned chiefly by foreign seamen, who would certainly refuse to fight.

The Channel Squadron leaves Portsmouth and Plymouth on November 28, to assemble at Portland the day following, leaving on December 4 for a cruise along the coast of Portugal and Spain, which will last until Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell has to vacate the command.

There are no less than 29 officers of the Royal Navy and Marines who have qualified either as Barristers-at-law or for Holy Orders. Of these, there are one paymaster, one assistant-paymaster, R.N., one lieutenant-colonel, two majors, and one captain, R.M., on the Active List, barristers. And on the Retired List are, one captain, one commander, one lieutenant, two paymasters-in-chief, and two assistant-paymasters, R.N., one colonel, one captain, and three lieutenants, R.M., barristers; and one captain, three lieutenants, three sub-lieutenants, five assistant-paymasters, R.N., and one major, R.M., in Holy Orders, four of these being vicars, and the remainder curates or in missions.

Captain Brooke has been ordered to assemble the Cruising Squadron, of which he is in command, at the Nun entrance of the River Niger on October 14, and to despatch an expedition up the river to punish the King of Abo for outrages committed on British subjects. The Opal, Algerine, Stork, Alecto, Starling, and Flirt would take part in the expedition. It was hoped that the light draught of the Alecto would enable Lieutenant and Commander Harston to tow the boats of the expedition well up the river, as the rains have been very plentiful this year. The Niger, however, has already begun to fall, but as the Alecto only draws eight feet, it was confidently expected that enough water would be found to enable the expedition to get high enough.

We called attention quite recently to the want of Gunnery Lieutenants in the Reserve ships. Last Friday three were appointed, and two of the First Lieutenants and one junior Lieutenant were displaced to make room for them. Neither of the First Lieutenants alluded to had served the whole period of home service? Why, therefore, supersede them? If the First Lord treated his butler in such a manner, he would probably find himself in Court. Surely there ought to be some stringent regulations on these points.

The Monarch, with boilers all but worn out, is still retained among the ironclads of the Mediterranean Fleet. Can it be because there is no ironclad in reserve at home to replace her?

The shortcomings of the Navy have lately been shown up in the service and daily papers, magazines, and periodicals of all kinds. Insufficient ships, inferior guns, and the "starvation of the Navy," is the general cry. There are no available men to relieve the crews of ships abroad whose periods of three years' service have expired. So far, there are no signs that these ships are to be relieved or recommissioned. The truth is, that to relieve a few small craft in China recently, the home depôt ships have been cleared of nearly all their disposable seamen. If it should become necessary to suddenly reinforce our foreign squadrons—say, China—their Lordships will find themselves with no ships ready for sea, and no men, a state of things not very creditable for the first Navy in the world. It is hardly to be believed that our Navy is the only one that has no fixed period for foreign service. Any foreign Naval man can tell, almost to a day, when he expects to return home, as three years abroad is the extreme limit. In the English service, however, ships are frequently kept abroad for periods varying from three to five years, there being no fixed rule, the whole thing depending, apparently, on the memory of some Admiralty clerk. Could not the vast intellect which has so lately brought forth a great-coat for officers without a place for the sword being provided, be utilised in arranging some fixed system for service abroad? A very short Board minute would do it, such as, "No ship, in time of peace, is to remain over three years in commission." Should the Admiralty Civil Staff kindly approve the above, and allow "the sailor fellows, don't you know," to carry it out, a great step will be taken towards making the service more popular on the lower deck than it is at present. In fact, the Navy, as a whole, would benefit, for shorter periods of commission would give the officers better chances of employment in peace time, and enable them to keep up a knowledge of their work, while the men would be brought more often than they now are, and that at shorter intervals, under the magic influence of "home."

The classification of ships in the Navy List is still peculiar. We notice the new ships of the Satellite class are now all styled "corvettes," though the Dryad type are still "sloops." Why is this?

It seems incredible, but we believe it is true, as stated by Lord Charles Beresford, that the French small craft, and especially their gunboats, are far better armed and have far greater speed than similar vessels in the English service. This is neither satisfactory nor creditable.

Captain H. J. Cleveland will recommission the Superb at Malta in December. For the command of the Carysfort several officers are named, and amongst others Captain Compton E. Domvile, but no one has as yet been selected. Captain Ernest Rice will retain the command of the Iris, now ordered to Malta to pay off.

In the olden days, troopships were wont to be regarded by Naval officers as the last refuge for the destitute, but since the introduction of the new Indian troopships, Lieutenants of a different stamp have applied for these appointments, and, as stated by a correspondent last week, the Admiralty now receive numerous applications,—but, it should have been added, entirely from married men.

What has become of the Detached Squadron that was to have been commissioned early this year? It is a case of no ships, no guns, no men, and no money! Want of money has forced the Admiralty to have the defects of the Channel Squadron patched up, instead of being made good.

With regard to the so-called trials of the Krupp gun belonging to the Royal Marine Artillery, and the new 6-in. B.L. gun at Eastney before the Lords of the Admiralty, we are in a position to state that the assertions of "A Constant Reader," in a letter we recently published, headed "Krupp v. Woolwich," are inaccurate. According to a gallant Admiral holding a high official position, the Krupp gun did obtain a range of 8,500 yards at the elevation stated, and with a charge of only 14 pounds of powder. But, nothing in the way of a competitive trial took place before the Lordships at Eastney. Both guns fired three rounds each. The distance of range was only approximately taken as the elevation at which the two guns were fired was in no case the same. The report which appeared in the Times was, we are assured, inaccurate, as whoever supplied the information had no data to go on, as there really was none. Their Lordships ordered the firing to take place merely to see both guns worked, and the Artillery officers present came to the conclusion that the Krupp breech action was much more simple and easy to work than that of the "improved French system," being introduced into the Navy. It would, however, be absurd to suppose that the Krupp gun, with its 14-lb. charge and 64-lb. shot, could compete in point of range with the long 6-in. B.L. gun, with its 34-lb. charge and 100-lb. shot.

The Bristol Brigade of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers gave a complimentary dinner on Saturday last to Captain Gooch, R.N., on that officer resigning the command of the Bristol Brigade; and to Sub-Lieutenant Sohier, upon his retiring from the corps, after ten and a half years' service.

Commander Hubert Grenfell, late of the Phœnix, has accepted an appointment at Elswick, in the firm of Sir William Armstrong, Mitchell, and Co. Commander Grenfell is at present superintending the fitting of the gun mountings, magazines, shell-rooms, and torpedo-gear in the new cruisers being constructed at Elswick for Foreign Governments.

Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay and Staff left Constantinople on Saturday last in the Helicon. The reception granted to the Commander-in-Chief by the Sultan of Turkey was most cordial. His Majesty bestowed the Grand Cordon of the Medjidieh on the Lord John Hay.

The Crown Prince of Germany will land next week at Valencia, to pay a visit to the King of Spain, on behalf of the Emperor of Germany. Considering that the Crown Prince is the husband of the Princess Royal of England, it is to be hoped that the British flag will be represented among the war-ships which will assemble on the occasion to do honour to the heir to the German Imperial Crown.

The nomenclature of the various so-called Divisions of the Royal Regiment of Artillery appears to be too much for the Indian authorities, for we observe in the detail of troops in India in the monthly Army List the Artillery are not specified by Batteries, as in other commands, but are lumped together, as,—Bengal, seven Batteries R.H.A.; twenty-one Batteries Field Artillery, &c. The economy of space, but not the utility of this, is manifest.

We believe so multifarious are the examinations an officer has to pass, and the records to be kept, that it is perfectly possible for an officer who has satisfied all requirements to be passed over for promotion in consequence of the War-Office authorities not having the necessary evidence of his qualifications.

The vacancies in the Cavalry for subalterns appear now less formidable. According to the November Army List, there are now 21. Of these, the 1st Life Guards appear to want two; the Blues, three; the 1st and 5th Dragoon Guards and 18th Hussars, two each; and the 3rd and 7th Dragoon Guards, 4th, 10th, 11th, 13th, 21st Hussars, 6th Dragoons, and 5th and 16th Lancers, one respectively.

"X." has sent us an extract from the official work on topography, "as a sample of the questions which unfortunate officers are liable to have put to them on their examinations, in subjects C and D, for promotion," and he says he does so for "the edification" of ourselves and our readers. We cannot conscientiously affirm that we are edified by it, and we know of very few of our readers, except the Field-Marshals, the Adjutant-General, the Chaplain-General, and the Equerries and Aides-de-Camp in Waiting, who could answer the question off-hand. It is as follows:—"The bearing of the Pole Star being observed 343° 30′ at the time that ζ Ursæ Majoris is at the same altitude with and east of it, what is the magnetic variation of the compass?" (!) Now, is not that preposterous, if it be a sample of any kind of examination for promotion, except it were for the F.R.S., or the like? Imagine Lord Wolseley at Tel-el-Kebir, where the stars were really of use, and fought in their courses against Arabi, calling for his compass, and taking the altitude of ζ! The "Ursæ Majoris" is delicious; your ζ governs the genitive case! This is pedantry run mad. And gallant officers and gentlemen are sent howling into the bush and banished to distant colonies, in melancholy sea-coast villages, to mourn over wasted lives, smoke bad tobacco, and use worse language, because they cannot satisfy the curiosity of the prigs and dominies who preside over their destinies in relation to abstruse physics and problems connected with them, never likely to be of practical value.

The report on the French War Estimates shows that the number of non-combatants, which ten years ago amounted to 13,850 men, stands for next year at 26,288 men; the expenditure, too, has risen from 20,121,000 f. to 27,977,000 f., an increase of £320,000. No doubt, the real expenditure will be in excess of the estimates, what with the creation of a Colonial Army, and the necessity which will, no doubt, exist of keeping a certain number of troops under the flag longer than usual. Already this measure has been applied to the Marines, and the men belonging to that corps of the class of 1878, instead of being liberated at once, will have to serve their full time, and will not be liberated until next year. We see that the conscription will furnish France with this quantity of raw material,—88,531 men for the Infantry; 13,071, Cavalry; 23,052, Artillery; 2,571, Engineers; 5,470, Military Train; 4,295, Administration.

In the last century, when a young fellow got an ensigncy in an infantry regiment, he was said to have been "presented with a pair of colours," or to have "got his colours." We often read in accounts of battles, that so many "stands of colours," or "pairs of colours," were captured, and we are left in doubt (shared probably by the author) as to the actual number of colours taken. These or similar expressions are still used, and cause some misconception. In the descriptions given by our contemporaries of the deeply interesting ceremony that took place in Edinburgh, on the 14th inst., we read that "seventeen stands of colours," formerly borne by Scotch Regiments, were committed by the Duke of Cambridge, with all appropriate formalities, to the care of the authorities of the venerable Cathedral of St. Giles. We are unable yet to give a correct and complete list of these memorable witnesses of Scottish bravery and fidelity, but we hope to do so shortly. The ceremony of last Wednesday was not only deeply interesting, but doubly significant. The chief part was taken by H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, who was commissioned to express her Majesty's cordial approval of the care and respect shown for these mementoes of men who were faithful unto death. The increased interest now taken in the preservation of old regimental colours, as well as of regimental histories, has another aspect which cannot be disregarded. It is a protest by the Army and by the country against the demolition of that regimental system of which those colours are mournful relics,—a system which is tottering to its fall, and will be in ruins if the work of restoration be deferred much longer. The Daily News says:—"The adoption of the Territorial system has gone far to abolish the prestige of regimental colours." What has it given us instead?

With reference to the case of Brigade-Surgeon Elkington, referred to by us last week, we would suggest, in the interests of the Brigade of Guards, as well as of the Army Medical Department, that the Major-General commanding the Home District should order a Court of Inquiry. Until some such tribunal has had the case submitted to it, it is impossible for the medical officers of the Foot Guards to serve together as they are now.

At Aldershot, the warrant officers and staff serjeants are permitted to wear forage-cap badges; while in the Home District, at least, the badge is prohibited.

Owing to his absence at the interesting ceremony in Edinburgh, of which there is a brief account given elsewhere, the Duke of Cambridge was not able to accompany the Landgrave of Hesse to Aldershot on Wednesday.

The news that Usibepu has been defeated with heavy loss will not cause any great excitement in Europe, or even in England and in Natal. As long as these small civil wars do not disturb the colonists, the accounts of the slaughter of one impi by another will be received with exquisite composure. But the natives of Zululand may well regret the day when the rule of Cetewayo was destroyed, and the country split up, under one of the most pitiable inspirations that ever statesman or soldier yielded to, into "States," so arranged by Colonel Villiers, carrying out the instructions, we suppose, of higher powers, that conflict and war became inevitable. Now, suppose the Boer delegates, whom our newspapers are lecturing so severely for all their bad deeds, were to turn round on Lord Derby, and ask him to look at the state to which our policy had brought a country conterminous for many miles with the Transvaal, would not his lordship find some difficulty in proving that our interference had been beneficent, or our withdrawal from Zululand wise and kindly? Those interesting Bechuanas are, it seems, to be saved at all hazards from the dreadful Boers; but if a neutral commission of intelligent, unprejudiced men were sent out to the Transvaal to-morrow, we believe they would find that the Kafirs under Boer rule are quite as prosperous and as free as Kafirs anywhere else, and that the Commissioners would probably recommend the frontier tribes to submit to Boer rule, and claim Boer protection. Mr. Kruger and his associates may well contrast their reception at the Foreign Office to-day, with that which was accorded to them when they came over with their petition for the restoration of the Republic, and their protest against annexation; but though they may feel proud of the sturdy burghers who flew to arms for the defence of their rights, besieged our garrisons, and inflicted severe blows on our troops, they must surely feel in their heart of hearts very grateful to the timorous or magnanimous statesman who staid Sir Evelyn Wood's columns just as they were about to sweep through the Republic from the Vaal to the Limpopo. It may be as well to repeat here what cannot be, in justice to so thorough a soldier, ever forgotten,—that Sir Evelyn Wood did not sign the Convention with the Boers after the truce following the affair at Majuba, and that the document did not appear with his signature when it was returned to Downing Street.

It was thought that General Forgemol, who has just retired from the command of the French troops in Tunis, would not have a successor, the idea being that a considerable portion of the expeditionary force would be withdrawn. This does not appear to be the case, and we see that General Forgemol is to be replaced by General Logerot, who will not only act as Commander-in-Chief of the French troops, but will also fill the post of War Minister to the Bey. If we can credit the French explanation of this change, it lies in the fact that the Bey felt humiliated at the idea of his War Minister being dependent upon Algeria. To soothe the wounded dignity of the Bey, he is now to have an independent French War Minister. We can well imagine the satisfaction with which the soul of the enthralled monarch will hail this modification.

There is an extraordinary exhibition of activity among "the Princes" of Europe just at present. One cannot take up a paper without seeing that a Prince of great or minor importance is, or is about to be, en voyage, and without reading comments, and surmises, and dissertations respecting the Royal wanderer. In our own isle, the Prince of Wales, not long returned from German manœuvres and Danish domestic delights, is not farther afield than the coverts of Banff House; the Duke of Edinburgh is throwing off some of his surplus energy in opening hospitals; but the Duke of Connaught is by this time close to the shores of the vast Empire where he will, we trust, enjoy a pleasant and prosperous command; the Duke of Cambridge is just back from one of those displays of a military character in which he takes a soldierly interest, after an experience of two nights out of three out of bed. Fortunately, the movements of our Royal Princes are not exposed to the suspicious scrutiny to which the travels of a Crown Prince of Germany or Austria, or of a Grand Duke of Russia, are subjected in Europe. The visit of the Crown Prince of Portugal to us will not be coupled with the sale of Delagoa Bay, the cession of Goa, or an Anglo-Portugo-African confederation; but the French are much agitated by the return visit of the son and heir of the Kaiser to the King of Spain, although it is only the fulfilment of a promise made at Homburg, before Alfonso XII. had made himself obnoxious to Parisian canaille by accepting the honorary colonelcy of the Schleswig-Holstein Lancers. More important than any Royal or Imperial movements just now is the visit of M. de Giers to Prince Bismarck.

There is at present a severe outbreak of scarlet-fever among the troops in Dublin, chiefly at Portobello Barracks. Three officers, an officer's wife, several men, and some 20 children have been attacked. Up to the present, three deaths have taken place. There have also been several cases of typhoid in the Royal Barracks, an officer of the Rifles having just escaped with his life. This time last year, Lieutenant Richmond, of the 21st Hussars, died, and Lieutenant Gill, of the 11th Regiment, only just escaped, whilst some 25 cases occurred among the men, nearly half proving fatal. There is no doubt the general condition of the barracks in Dublin is disgracefully bad. Linen-Hall is almost falling to pieces, while the state of the Royal Barracks is almost incredible. There is a general air of squalor and age about the interior of the building, that shows how badly they are cared for. Island Bridge is also in very bad order, the central building being partly devoid of plaster, and looking like an old condemned workhouse. The drains and sewers in the different barracks in Ireland are shamefully old-fashioned and in want of modern appliances. At Naas, the Government has been threatened with a prosecution by the sanitary authorities, all the barrack sewage flowing into an open pit. At Mullingar, matters seem to be equally bad, and a short time ago there was a letter from a civil practitioner there, describing a state of things that could hardly be equalled in the worst continental town, the sewage flowing through an open drain from the barracks. The condition of the troops in Dublin is very bad, some 5 per cent. of the garrison being in the hospital from the malady which is under the protection of the House of Commons. The type of disease is very severe, and many of the men are so badly affected that they will be invalids for years.

The French Government owns to an expenditure of 14,000,000 f., or £560,000; but it is supposed that 30,000,000 f. have, in reality, been already expended, and that more millions will soon be swallowed up in the gulf. In the Paris Presse, we find the following remarks:—"We were always opposed to the Tonquin expedition, which can bring neither glory nor profit, and which threatens to entangle us in the most inextricable complications. But since the Government is determined to go on with the expedition, the necessary credits should be voted, to bring it to a close as soon as possible. In May last, we showed that the occupation of Tonquin would cost us at least £4,000,000 a year. The occupation of Cochin China cost us nearly half that amount in the first years, under far more favourable conditions. There we had to deal with a population of only 3,000,000 inhabitants, whereas the population of Tonquin is from 15,000,000 to 18,000,000." The writer then points out several other difficulties attending the Tonquin expedition, such as contact with China, Black Flags, and waterways, which, except in the rainy season, cannot be navigated by French gunboats. Under these circumstances, and seeing the storm which is evidently brewing in Europe, the editor of the Presse hopes that Parliament will vote £4,000,000 at once, and will at once wind up the Tonquin affair, ridding the Gallic bosom of a nightmare which is sadly oppressing it. On this same subject, Citizen Henri Rochefort has paraphrased the old saying,—"Il est temps de nous montrer, cachons nous," into, "Il est temps de nous concentrer, dispersons nous." And not a few Frenchmen fear that the Tonquin and other expeditions will exercise the same baneful influence on the coming year as did the Mexican expedition on that of 1870. For the moment, it appears that both the Madagascar and the Tonquin expeditions are nearly at a stand-still for want, not of funds, but of men. L'Avenir Militaire publishes a long article in the same sense as that of the Presse.

According to this month's Army List the number of Militia officers holding certificates from the Schools of Instruction is 569, of which the Infantry contributes 436 and the Artillery 133. The distribution of these shows the same inequalities to which we called attention last year. As there are two Schools of Instruction in England, one in Ireland, and none in Scotland, it might be feared that the officers of the latter country might be heavily handicapped; so far, however, is this from being the case, that they stand immeasurably above those of the sister-countries. The 3rd Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers heads the list, as usual, with 20 h.p.s., followed by the 4th Battalion of the same regiment with 12, and by the 3rd Battalion Royal Scots with 11. The 2nd Brigade, North Irish Division, R.A., has the same number,—11. The only other corps attaining to the dignity of double figures is the 3rd Battalion Gloucester Regiment. The 3rd Brigade, Cinque Ports Division, R.A., and the 5th Brigade, Scottish Division, R.A., have 9 each. The 3rd Battalion Buffs, the 5th Battalion Royal Fusiliers, the 3rd Battalion Devonshire Regiment, the 3rd Battalion Black Watch, the 3rd Battalion Berkshire Regiment, the 3rd Battalion Seaforth Highlanders, and 3rd Battalion Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders have 8 each. No fewer than three brigades of Artillery and fifteen battalions of Infantry are without a single certificated officer, and the list of corps with only one or two each is painfully long.

There is no reason to think that the Egyptian Government would be allowed to sell Remingtons and Krupp guns to the Chinese, in the present state of their relations with France; but if the Khedive were to dispose of some of the immense matériel collected by Ismael Pasha in 1867 and subsequently, he would be within his rights. One of the most regrettable acts ever committed, perhaps, except the destruction of the houses of Balaclava and Kadikoi, &c., by our troops in September, 1854, was the bursting of a number of beautiful rifled guns and the spoiling of a large number of empty torpedoes at Alexandria. It might have been necessary to damp or fire the gunpowder, though even much of the immense stores of that matériel in the forts could have been sold or utilised; but the unreasoning panic or pure spirit of mischief which dictated the splitting of the A tubes of the Armstrongs, and drilling holes in the torpedo cases, had no justification in the attitude of the Arabs,—although Sir B. Seymour could not be aware of their utter discomfiture, and that there was no very great likelihood that they might have been turned to account in the defence of the country which our troops had to occupy. It was a pity, however, to act so hastily. They were the property of the Government we were defending and protecting. The stores of Remingtons were very large, and there were many tons of fixed ammunition in the magazines—some never paid for—as well as several batteries of Krupp field-guns at Cairo, &c., which Wood Sirdar would not require.

The appointment of Sir W. Russell to a regimental colonelcy, which has been mentioned by a contemporary, would afford an admirable—at all events, a forcible—illustration of the advantages of being able "to live a thing down." Some years back, the Horse Guards were in a state of vehement excitement on account of certain circumstances connected with the enterprises outside the area of his professional duties of the gallant and not fortunate officer. His aspirations after Parliamentary honours were as unsuccessful as his pursuit of more substantial returns, and, to the great regret of those who knew Sir W. Russell's good qualities as an officer, his career seemed to be closed. Indeed, it needed all the pressure which could be applied to a very soft-hearted man, to prevent the official Atropos from performing the dread act which would have put an end to the chance of attaining the position for which the former Lieutenant-Colonel of the 14th Hussars is put forward. We rejoice that the name of one who did good service in his time, and against whom there was no public disparagement, save that he was venturesome and unlucky in a field on which he had no business to enter, was not consigned to oblivion, and we congratulate the Horse Guards on the concession which they made; that is all we can say. But the turn of the gallant officer has not come yet, if ever it comes at all, and Generals B. Harrison and Seymour are before him on the list for regiments. Even if he were to be appointed, we presume there would be no pecuniary benefit in Sir W. Russell's case, as he is, we think, on the £600-a-year list.

The appointments to the Royal Horse Artillery frequently call for observation, and there appear to be secret influences at work which militate against certain officers gaining their "jacket." One case has come to our knowledge which deserves more than a passing comment. Lieutenant Bruen, R.A., has been treated in a way which is, to say the least of it, curious. At the end of September, as officers of Mr. Bruen's standing were being appointed to the Royal Horse Artillery, that gentleman made some inquiries as to why he was passed over. He was informed by the then Acting Deputy-Adjutant-General that he had been passed over because of a medical report which declared him unfit for foreign service, and this precluded the possibility of his being posted to a Horse Artillery battery. This fact, however, on inquiry turns out to be very ambiguous and entirely incorrect. It appears that no medical officer ever made any such report, but the information was obtained through a confidential report of a commanding officer. Who made this report, when it was framed, or of what facts it consists, Mr. Bruen is unable to discover. He declares that the report is not founded on fact, as his physical record proves. He passed the medical examination for the long course at Shoeburyness. He has played for years in all the best cricket matches of the Artillery service, and has won several regimental steeplechases; on one occasion riding in three consecutive three-mile steeplechases, two of which he won. In the hunting-field, Mr. Bruen can hold his own. If such performances are not sufficient to guarantee a man's physical fitness for foreign service, it is hard to imagine what is now considered necessary. It seems a bad inducement for gentlemen to enter the Army, when such under-hand influences and efforts are made to stop their legitimate promotion as have been made in Mr. Bruen's case. He has been informed that he is now too senior for the Royal Horse Artillery, although an officer senior to him, who has never been abroad, has been one of the last appointments. It happens, therefore, that Mr. Bruen finds himself cut off from that legitimate ambition in his profession which it is presumable influenced his entrance into it, and that, too, through a system which ought to be foreign to the English sense of common fair-play.

The French Military Attaché has, we understand, been in communication with Lieutenant-Colonel Prior, with a view to obtaining information as to the War Game on Models, introduced by that officer.

The horses of the 3rd Hussars are not yet free from suspicion of glanders, and several are still isolated and under observation. Quite recently, an officer of this regiment sent an animal from Aldershot to London, for sale at a repository. On arrival there, it was found to be suffering from acute glanders, and was immediately destroyed. A state of affairs almost incredible is here disclosed. There has evidently been culpable negligence somewhere at the Camp.

CHRISTIAN JANISSARIES FOR PHAROAH.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—In view of the contemplated total withdrawal of her Majesty's troops, I venture to submit the following suggestion, i.e., the formation of a Corps of Instructors, say, a thousand men, selected by permission of her Majesty's Government, among time-expired soldiers volunteering for Egypt. To avoid both the name and character of a Pretorian Guard, the corps to be composed of small detachments of Cavalry, Ordnance, Engineers, and Riflemen, as well as of Ambulance, Telegraph, and Railway Transport detachments, and of a company of miscellaneous artisans, (tailors, shoemakers, saddlers, smiths, &c.) Officers to be in the same position as the British officers at present in the service of the Khedive, and, like them, to be selected by Sir Evelyn Wood. Non-commissioned officers and men to enlist for five years, pay and rations to be those of British troops in India. Uniform and armament to be similar to that of the Regular Army. Non-commissioned officers and men to receive a premium of not less than £5 on joining, and a minimum sum of £20 at the expiration of their term, in addition to a grant of land, if desirous to settle in Egypt. The corps of instructors to be quartered at Cairo or Alexandria, and only available for Lower Egypt, and though linked to the native army for purposes of drill, neither to mount guard nor to do escort or similar duties, except when called upon by the Sirdar to protect the Khedive and public order. His Highness to be honorary colonel, the men taking the oath of allegiance for the duration of five years, and being during that time Egyptian soldiers and subjects, amenable only to the jurisdiction of the Sirdar and to courts-martial constituted by his order. No appeal to civil courts or the Home Government admissible. The component parts of the corps indicate the object in view, i.e., English soldiers and no British force, a military organisation and a utilitarian purpose. To secure the latter, native volunteers—enrolled only for service in Egypt proper, and not obliged to go to the Soudan—should be attached to the various detachments, and be trained in the respective branches of the military profession and any handicraft they may wish to learn, and for which an extra allowance should be paid. The Citadel of Cairo and the Abbassiyeh Barracks offering ample accommodation for military workshops, their establishment would entail a trifling expense. A school for non-commissioned native officers should be an additional feature, as the utter want of trained non-commissioned officers is at present one of the chief difficulties Sir Evelyn Wood and his officers have to contend with.—I am, &c., Malortie.

COLONEL COLBORNE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—Permit me, for the sake of truth and fair-play, to make a few brief remarks concerning the tenour of an article that appeared in a late edition of your valuable publication. I refer to Col. Colborne's return to Cairo, and the part taken by that officer in the Soudan Campaign. The circumstances as related in your edition of Oct. 20 are, allow me to say, erroneous, and likely to misguide the numerous readers of the Army and Navy Gazette. Your correspondent evidently insinuates that Col. Colborne, having made a little trip to Khartoum, returned as soon as possible to Cairo, in order to enjoy his pay and allowances in peace and comfort. May I now be allowed to state that Col. Colborne served in the field with the Egyptian Army through the whole of the Sennaar Campaign, whilst other officers stayed on board a steamer on the Nile? I had occasion, in common with nearly all the English officers here, to see this old Crimean soldier on his return from the Soudan. He was dangerously ill, and suffering from dysentery of a bad type, caused by a scanty and unsuitable diet, fatigue, and unwholesome water. The Army doctors in the Soudan declared that he could not live without change of air and prolonged rest. His appearance, that of a dying man, fully corroborated their statements. May I be allowed to add, that after a brief sojourn in the capital, he endeavoured to return to the Soudan, but was, like many other officials, prevented from doing so by the fact of the road between Suakim and Berber being cut by the rebels, and remaining intercepted up to the present date.—I am, &c., A. Leslie,

Cairo, Nov. 6. Medical Officer, Board of Health.

[We had no desire to misrepresent Col. Colborne's case, but we said he was at Shepherd's Hotel instead of being in the Soudan. It was hard on the Egyptian Government to send an officer of his age to the Soudan, in the hope of getting much work out of him.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

REGIMENTAL MAJORS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—A letter signed "Senior Major," in your last week's issue, furnishes another instance of the hardships that Regimental Majors, promoted since July 1, 1881, have to endure, and it also confirms the substance of your leading article of June 16 last, together with the preceding correspondence on the subject. It is clearly our duty to represent our present anomalous position in a regiment, which is nothing more than that of a subaltern in masquerade, to the Adjutant-General of the Forces, for transmission to the Secretary of State, in order to obtain an immediate release from the minor duties of a subaltern, now imposed upon us, in addition to those of a regimental and garrison field-officer. At present, if there is no subaltern available for some unpleasant duty, a regimental major is immediately detailed for it, should no captain be at hand. Consequently, it amounts to this,—we are called upon to act as "odd man" in a regiment. I would suggest either of the following remedies:—(1), Abolishment of the rank of major; (2), the opportunity of retiring upon the next higher rate of pension being given to those majors, many of whom, on the eve of their promotion under the old system, were compelled to accept mud-majorships to carry out the scheme; (3), that purchase captains should be promoted to vacant lieutenant-colonelcies in more fortunate regiments.—I am, &c.,

Regimental "Odd Man."

THE LATE INDIAN ORDNANCE CORPS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—From time to time for some considerable period, there have been in your journal both leading articles and letters from correspondents on the subject of the retirement and pension rules of the fragments left of the late Honourable East India Company's three regiments of Artillery, and the bearing they have on the Royal Regiment. The views and opinions expressed have tended generally to the same point, viz., the desirability of increased acceleration of retirement of these officers, and the consequent more timely extinction of these fragments, both as a matter of justice to the officers themselves, Royal Artillery, and late Indian Artillery, and as a means towards an end, viz., reform and reorganisation of a large and important section of the Army, for it is very certain to any one acquainted with the necessities of a really new and more efficient organisation that no such change can be effected till every officer of the late Indian Artillery shall cease to be serving. The details of these articles and letters have, however, varied considerably, each writer apparently viewing the question from his own point of view, or as it affected the individual on behalf of whom the article or letter was penned. Now, it seems to me that the matter should be viewed from an Imperial point of view, viz., the good and efficiency of the regiment at large; and I also think all tends towards the conviction that the time has arrived for the settlement of the question. There are apparently four parties concerned,—the War Office, the India Council, the officers of the Imperial List (Royal Artillery), the officers of the late Company's Artillery. The War Office desire the increased facilities for retirement to the Indian Artillery, for the purpose of maintaining a healthy flow of promotion and preventing undue compulsory retirement on officers of the Imperial List, and for the gradual extinction of a body of officers whose existence is a bar to reorganisation and reform of the regiment. The India Council do not desire to do anything, on the ground that the facilities and inducements already held forth to these officers are sufficient, providing good voluntary retiring allowances after periods of service, corresponding to those after which Imperialist officers are subject to compulsory retirement. The officers of the late Indian Artillery (seniors) naturally object to compulsory retirement, and take their stand on what is known as the "Hensley Clause" of the Parliamentary guarantee, granted on the abolition of the Company; while the junior officers of the Indian lists complain that by this retardment their position is hopeless. The officers of the Imperial List loudly call for assistance, being simply strangled by the present block and its inevitable consequence, compulsory retirement, entailed by the non-removal of Indian Artillerymen. Sir, all four of the parties who are thus interested have right on their side, and the right of each is diametrically opposed to the right of the other. How are these conflicting interests to be reconciled? I repeat, by a decision grounded on Imperial interests alone; and I maintain that any dispassionate reviewer of the case will not hesitate to say that the parties who should give way, for the general good, are the India Council and the officers of the late Indian Artillery, the balance of justice being in favour of the War Office and the officers of the Imperial List. The officers of the late Company's Artillery should on their part bow to present necessities, unforeseen at the amalgamation, while the India Council on their part should do their utmost to soften the circumstances to their former clients. Nor would this be difficult. Let them show kindness by withdrawing the prohibitory conditions of the annuity scheme, making it a reality, and not a sham, and at the same time show firmness, by introducing removal to an unemployed, full-pay, supernumerary list, after terms of service in ranks corresponding to those pertaining to the Royal service. Let this be done, and I venture to say that the Imperial good would be attained by complete reform and organisation being the more speedily made possible, while no man of unbiassed mind would have shadow of ground for complaint.—I am, &c., Equity.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

Sir,—A great deal has been said in your columns about the Lieutenant-Colonels of the Indian Lists, Royal Artillery, and sometimes by those who are only imperfectly acquainted with the subject. The presence of these officers in the Royal Regiment is no doubt inconvenient just now, as they possess certain rights guaranteed to them by Act of Parliament, which are not in harmony with the present system of promotion in the Army. It is sought to deprive them of active employment after they have completed five years' service in the rank of lieutenant-colonel, in order to place them on the same footing as lieutenant-colonels of the old Artillery List. It cannot be denied the fact of officers serving in the same regiment under different conditions is an anomaly, but this state of things is not new, having existed since the amalgamation, at which time the officers of the Indian Artillery, as a measure of State policy, were given commissions in the Royal Artillery. The terms of the Act of Parliament guaranteeing to the Indian officers certain rights and privileges regarding pay and promotion are broad and comprehensive, and the application to these officers of any measure savouring of compulsory retirement, such as removal from employment (virtually enforced retirement in a disguised form), would be a direct infringement of the Act. This Act guarantees to them the same status in the Royal service which they held in the Company's, and one of the privileges enjoyed was non-removal from employment, except for misconduct or incompetency. The Under-Secretary of State for India, in a speech made by him in the House of Commons on May 30 last, said:—"It is unquestionable that the Company possessed the power of prescribing and altering the limit of tenure of appointments and commands, and there is no reason to doubt that, had the Court of Directors continued in authority, they would have exercised this power in respect of regimental commands." Is not this begging the question? It is not what the Company had the power to do, or might have done, but what they actually had done, or, more properly speaking, what their custom was at the time of the amalgamation. The Secretary of State for War, in his answer to Sir Trevor Lawrence, in the House of Commons on April 12 last, puts the matter in its true light when he says:—"The officers referred to [lieutenant-colonels Indian Artillery] come within the provisions of what is usually known as the Henley Clause of the Act for the Better Government of India, by which they have a Parliamentary guarantee for the preservation of rights in the matter of service and promotion. Under that guarantee, it is held that they are not subject to the Articles of the Royal Warrant which provides for removal from regiments after certain periods of command." If it is now thought expedient to get rid of these officers by an Act of Parliament, justice demands that they do not suffer the great pecuniary loss, both immediate and prospective, which removal from their commands must necessarily involve. In a future communication, I am prepared to show how this question may be solved.—I am, &c., A Constant Reader.

The 7th Hussars will arrive at Aldershot, from Colchester, as follows:—Dismounted portion, by special train, on the 24th inst., leaving Colchester at 10 a.m. Mounted portion by march route—two squadrons on the 27th; head-quarters and two squadrons on the 28th. This regiment will be quartered in the West Cavalry Barracks, in succession to the 3rd Hussars. The 3rd Hussars will proceed to Hampton Court, Kensington, and Hounslow, as follows, and remain until further orders:—One troop to Hampton Court, by march route, on the 20th; one troop to Kensington, by march route, on the 20th; head-quarters and six troops to Hounslow, by march route, on the 22nd.

Yesterday (Friday) morning, the 39th Dorsetshire Regt. paraded at Aldershot at an early hour, for route-marching, and, under the command of Col. Dixon, escorted the old colours, which shared the fortunes of the regiment (whose proud motto is "Primus in Indis") from 1831 to 1843, to Farnborough Station, where they were handed over to a colour party of two officers and four colour-serjeants, for conveyance to Sherborne, to be placed in the old abbey there.

Closely following upon the speech of the Prime Minister at the Mansion House, in which he announced the immediate withdrawal of a portion of the Egyptian Army of Occupation, orders were issued by the Horse Guards on Saturday for the return of the following troops:—The C Baty. B Brig. Royal Horse Artillery, home; the 19th Hussars, to Colchester; the 5th Baty. 1st Brig. Scottish Division, Royal Artillery, to Malta; the 26th Compy. Royal Engineers and the 1st Batn. Royal Sussex Regt., to stations to be afterwards named; the 2nd Batn. Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, to Gibraltar; the half of the 1st Batn. Royal West Kent Regt., to Malta; and the Cameron Highlanders, also to Malta. The following are to remain for the present at Alexandria:—The I Baty. 2nd Brig. and the 6th Baty. 1st Brig., Scottish Division, Royal Artillery; the 17th Compy., Royal Engineers; the 1st Batn. Royal Highlanders, the 3rd Batn. King's Royal Rifle Corps, and the 1st Batn. Gordon Highlanders. In order to accommodate these movements, the 1st Baty. 1st Brig. Southern Division, Royal Artillery, will be removed from Malta to Portsmouth, the 1st Batn. North Lancashire Regt. from Gibraltar to India, and the 2nd Batn. Royal Munster Fusiliers from Malta to India. It is, however, announced that should the troops ordered to Malta and Gibraltar not be allowed to land on account of quarantine, other arrangements will be notified.

The Superb, says the Malta Times, has been ordered to England, to receive a new crew. She will be prepared for recommissioning at the Malta Dockyard. The date of her sailing is uncertain, on account of certain defects in her machinery requiring to be made good before leaving.

The Admiralty have received a most exhaustive confidential report on French ordnance from Capt. Kane, R.N., the new Naval Attaché. The report goes fully into the whole ordnance question as affecting the French Navy, and is of the most elaborate character. It is to be hoped that the Admiralty, having now such reliable data to go upon, will no longer delay supplying breech-loading guns to the Navy. Although far from being an alarmist, I candidly confess that I view the possibility of a war with France with anything but a "light heart." In the olden days, the superior seamanship of our sailors enabled them to outmanœuvre the French, to lay their ships alongside those of the enemy, and thus enable cold steel, wielded by brawny English arms, animated by that indomitable British pluck for which the nation was famous, to do the rest. But now boarding is out of the question. Seamanship is of little account. The French engineers are as good as ours. The French ships have, according to Sir Thomas Brassey, the advantage over ours in speed and in ordnance. The French Navy is as strong as ours, numerically speaking. What chance, then, have our ships? They can neither overtake, run from, nor close with the enemy. They must, therefore, remain targets, to be shot at or rammed at the enemy's choice. Such a state of things is not reassuring, even to the bravest.—Hampshire Telegraph.

The remains of the late Richard C. P. Lawrenson, Fleet Surgeon, H.M.'s Dockyard, were interred on Sunday last in the Roman Catholic burial-ground of the Royal Naval Hospital, with full naval honours. The funeral procession left the hospital at 4 p.m., and consisted of a firing party of marines, then the coffin carried by six seamen, four dockyard officials and two naval officers officiating as pall-bearers, a large party of seamen, and Rear-Admiral W. Graham, C.B., and a great number of military and naval officers. At the grave-side the Rev. Canon R. Patiniott read the burial service, and the body was lowered into its resting-place, the marines firing the customary volleys.

There have been several sudden deaths lately amongst those employed in H.M.'s dockyard at Malta. First, the sudden death of Dr. R. C. P. Lawrenson, then a marine who died a few days after falling into the dock, next a blacksmith falling down dead at his work, Mr. E. Gregory, clerk, meeting his death suddenly at Marsa, and lastly, a labourer dying suddenly at Isola.

The Army.

5th Dragoon Guards. Col. Sir J. D. Bourne, Bart., late in command of the regiment, died suddenly at Brook Street, Grosvenor Square, on the 11th inst.

3rd Hussars. The regiment, which is under orders for Hounslow, was last quartered there in 1867-68, under command of Col. (now Major-Gen.) Howard Vyse, and prior to its departure for India. A previous acquaintance with Hounslow, and its contingent duties at Kensington and Hampton Court, was made in 1856-57, when the late Col. Unett was in command, with Gen. C. Foster as major and the Hon. Horace Monckton as senior captain.

4th Hussars. The regiment leaves Hounslow next week for Norwich.

7th Hussars. The regiment, under orders for Aldershot, was last quartered there in 1871-1872, under command of Col. Hale, moving to the Camp from York in the spring of 1871, and proceeding to Hounslow in relief of the 12th Lancers. A first acquaintance with Aldershot was made in 1856, when the late Gen. Hagart was in command, with his brother as major, Sir William Russell as senior capt., and the late Col. Fiennes as senior subaltern. It was in the cavalry brigade, under Gen. Scarlett, with the present Gen. Conolly as brigade-major.

8th Hussars. Capt. E. Pulleyne, late of the regiment, died at Clareville Grove, South Kensington, on the 10th inst.

10th Hussars. Brevet Lieut.-Col. Combe remains behind in India as A.A.G. of a Division, on the departure of the regiment for England.

19th Hussars. The regimental depôt, now attached to the 15th Hussars at Aldershot, will shortly be moved to Colchester, where it will remain until the arrival of the service troops from Egypt.

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

On the reduction of the Army of Occupation in Egypt, the following moves of batteries take place, viz. .—C Baty. B Brig., R.H.A., to England; No. 5 Baty. 1st. Brig., Scottish Division, to Malta; and 1st Baty. 1st Brig., Southern Division, Malta to Portsmouth. I Baty. 2nd Brig. and No. 6 Baty. 1st Brig., Scottish Division, remain in Egypt.

Major S. F. Carré, who was employed in the purchase of mules for the Egyptian Expedition, has been appointed to the command of the mountain battery at Khyra Gully, the 7th Baty. Northern Division, R.A.

The remains of the late Major F. B. Knox, of the Southern Division, Royal Artillery, who died at his residence, Hoelands Villa, Shaftesbury Road, Southsea, on Saturday morning last, from typhoid fever, were interred with military honours at the Portsmouth Cemetery on Tuesday afternoon. The coffin bore the following inscription:—"Francis Blake Knox, Major, R.A., died November 3rd, 1883, aged 41 years." The deceased was the second surviving son of Lieut.-Col. Knox, of Brittas, Thurles, Ireland. He was born July 4, 1842, and was gazetted a lieut. on April 1, 1863; became capt., Jan. 1, 1876; and major, Jan. 19 of the present year. From Jan. 1, 1879, to Oct. 20, 1880, he served as A.D.C. to the Inspector-General of Artillery at Head-quarters.

The provisions of the Indian Army Circular 85, 1883, have been extended to all soldiers of the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers enlisted for eight years' Army service, who are now between six and eight years' service, or, having completed the term of eight years with the colours, are entitled to be sent home during the present trooping season.

ROYAL ENGINEERS.

A Joint War-Office and India-Office Committee, consisting of Gen. Sir Henry Norman, K.C.B., Gen. Sir Alexander Taylor, K.C.B., Lieut.-Gen. R. Strachey, C.S.I., Major-Gen. Sir Andrew Clarke, K.C.M.G., C.B., Col. Sir John Stokes, K.C.B., Mr. R. Knox, C.B., and Lieut. E. S. E. Childers, R.E., secretary, has been appointed to consider the future establishment and conditions of service of Royal Engineers in India. Mr. A. W. Peel, M.P., is the chairman.

The 17th Compy. remains in Egypt on the reduction of the Army of Occupation. The 26th Compy. is to be withdrawn, but its station is not yet decided upon.

Three scholarships, in memory of Capt. Gill, who perished in what is known as the Palmer expedition, have been founded for the sons of officers of the Army at Brighton College, in the chapel of which there was unveiled by Gen. Sir Lintorn Simmons on Thursday, in the presence of a large audience, a tablet with this inscription:—"This is erected to the memory of Capt. William John Gill, a pupil here from 1856 to 1861. He entered the Royal Engineers in 1861. An adventurous journey in northern Russia, 1873, developed his capacity for exploration. Some years later, he undertook an expedition to China, with the view of penetrating its western frontier by routes not before traversed, and succeeded in making his way through Eastern Thibet to Talifu, and thence in the footsteps of his schoolfellow, Augustus Raymond Margary, to Bhamo, on the Irrawaddy River. Being attached to the Intelligence Department of the War Office, he made several hazardous journeys to collect valuable information for the public service. In 1882, during the British intervention in Egypt, he was despatched by the Government on special duty to the Suez Canal, and having proceeded into the Desert of Sinai, in company with Professor E. H. Palmer and Lieut. H. Charrington, R.N., the three were captured by an overpowering force of Bedouins and murdered, on Aug. 11, 1882. His remains, with those of his companions, were interred in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral on April 6, 1883, where a memorial tablet has been placed by their country, in commemoration of their services and untimely deaths. He was a good friend, a good soldier, and a most enterprising and accomplished traveller."

Grenadier Guards. Lieut. Daly, who died suddenly on the 8th inst., was buried at Aldershot on Monday with military honours. The bands of the regiment and of the Rifle Brigade, as well as about 400 men of the regiment, took part in the procession. Nearly all the staff officers of the division also attended, including Gen. Sir A. Alison and Gen. the Hon. W. Feilding.

Scots Guards. Capt. the Hon. N. de C. Dalrmyple has been appointed brigade-major on the staff of the Home District.

20th Lancashire Fusiliers. Capt. W. H. McNeill Hamilton, whose death was recorded last week, retired from the regiment after its return from the Crimean campaign, in which he had taken part, sharing in the battles of the Alma and Inkerman, and the siege of Sebastopol. He joined the regiment as an ensign in 1847.

21st Royal Scots Fusiliers. The 1st Batn., on arrival at Aldershot, will be quartered in L, M, N, and O Lines, North Camp, and attached to the 3rd Brigade. Major Bridge has vacated his appointment as D.A.A. and Q.M.G. for Musketry at Malta.

35th Royal Sussex Regiment. The destination of the regiment on its withdrawal from Egypt has not yet been decided upon.

37th Hampshire Regiment. The head-quarters will make a second acquaintance with Gosport since the regiment came home from India. It was quartered there in 1876-77, under Col. Bowles, and went thence to Winchester.

41st Welsh Regiment. Lieut.-Col. Currie has been ordered to proceed to Natal, to rejoin head-quarters from Staff employ in Ceylon, on promotion.

42nd Black Watch (Royal Highlanders). The regiment remains in Egypt. The memorial brass tablet executed by Messrs. Matthews and Hodgson, of Regent Street, W., to which we referred last week, is now completed and lodged in St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh. The memorial has been highly praised as a work of art.

46th Duke of Cornwall's L.I. On its withdrawal from Egypt, the regiment will proceed to Gibraltar.

47th Loyal North Lancashire Regiment proceeds from Malta to India.

49th Berkshire Regiment. The battalion has sustained a great loss in the retirement of Col. Corban, on the completion of five years in command. Col. Corban entered the 49th Regt. thirty-three years ago, and was with it throughout the Crimean campaign, including the battles of Alma and Inkerman, and the siege of Sebastopol. He has served in all the Mediterranean stations, and in both the East and West Indies. He commanded his battalion in Egypt, for some time holding the post of Commandant of Alexandria, when it was thought more than probable that Arabi Pasha would attack. His corps was the first to occupy Kafr Dowar, before the other regiments in the brigade could be brought up. He has the Crimean, Turkish, and Egyptian medals, the Khedivial star, and the 3rd Class of the Medjidie. With Col. Corban, the regiment loses an honoured link with the past, and his name will long live in the memory of all ranks as that of a good commanding officer and a kind friend.

ROYAL MARINES.

Regulations have been issued with regard to the future computation of time for officers of the Royal Marine Corps, which provide that for increase of pay, or retirement, every day is to be counted, whether in ordinary or leap year, on which they have received pay, and, dividing the total by 365, the result to be expressed in complete years and additional days. In computing service for promotion, whether by brevet under Admiralty or under War Office Regulations, or of service on the General or Divisional Staff, time is to be reckoned from date to date without regarding leap year, in accordance with Army rule.

50th Queen's Own Royal West Kent Regiment. The half-battalion in Egypt proceeds to Malta on the reduction of the Army of Occupation.

59th East Lancashire Regiment. This battalion was, we believe, last quartered at Dover in 1862-63, under command of Lieut.-Col. Lodder, and after its return from the Cape of Good Hope. Col. Lawson was at that time in command of a company, and Col. Frampton doing subaltern's duty. The "5 and 9," Lilywhites' Gazette, has the following:—"It is interesting to note that boys, the sons of past and present Lilywhites, are enlisting in the 'old corps.' Within the last month, Boy Day, the son of our canteen steward, a late serjeant of the regiment, was enlisted, and we hear that the name of our bandmaster's eldest son has been submitted to the Horse Guards for enlistment as a musician. Boy Gordon is a promising young violinist, has played solos in several of our battalion entertainments, and will, we believe, be an acquisition to our string band. Boy Meads, the brother of Private Meads, mess waiter in the officers' mess, has also lately enlisted in the battalion; and an application was, we hear, lately received for the enlistment of the two sons of John Malvin, late corporal 59th Regt., which was, we understand, returned, there being at present no vacancies for boys in the battalion. Colour-Serjt. Hartshorne will, we believe, shortly be transferred to the permanent staff of the Royal Guernsey Militia."

60th King's Royal Rifle Corps. The 3rd Batn. remains in Egypt.

69th Welsh Regiment. Lieut. Humphreys has relinquished the appointment of staff captain of the military police in Egypt.

73rd (Black Watch) Royal Highlanders will shortly be moved from Portsmouth to Aldershot, and, as at present arranged, will be quartered in the North Camp.

75th Gordon Highlanders. The regiment remains in Egypt.

79th Cameron Highlanders. Lieut. Scott is acting A.D.C. to Major-Gen. Sir G. Graham at Cairo. On withdrawal from Egypt, the regiment will go to Malta.

81st Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, on arrival home from India, about the 7th prox., will be quartered at Portsmouth.

88th Connaught Rangers. Major Brind has been appointed a Deputy-Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. on the staff of the Bengal Army.

104th Royal Munster Fusiliers. The regiment proceeds from Malta to India.

Rifle Brigade. A draft, consisting of four officers, two serjeants, two corporals, and 130 privates, 3rd Batn., is held in readiness to proceed to India, viâ the Suez Canal, at an early date, to join the 4th Batn. A detachment of 200 trained soldiers and recruits will shortly join the 3rd Batn. from the depôt.

Changes: Major Graham to 104th Regt.; Capt. Hemans, from Dublin District Office to 21st Hussars; Capt. Kitson, from 21st Hussars to Unattached List. There are five Regimental Districts, three Cavalry, and 28 Infantry regiments requiring Paymasters, viz.:—Warwick, Clonmell, Berwick-on-Tweed, Devizes, and Galway, 4th Hussars, 9th Lancers, 19th Hussars, 1st Batn. 3rd, 2nd Batn. 4th, 1st Batn. 6th, 2nd Batn. 7th, 1st Batn. 8th, 1st Batn. 13th, 2nd Batn. 13th, 2nd Batn. 19th, 2nd Batn. 24th, 33rd, 37th, 52nd, 55th, 56th, 57th, 61st, 64th, 67th, 79th, 86th, 91st, 98th, 99th, 106th, 108th, 1st Batn. The Auxiliary Forces.

MILITIA.

"A Militia Subaltern" writes:—"Now that the old system of training Militia recruits has been practically reverted to, viz., the two months' preliminary drill under the Adjutant, does it not seem just that some Militia officers should be employed during those two months as under the old scheme? Like many other Militia officers, I joined that service hoping to gain a practical knowledge of soldiering, and to take my chance of whatever service might be available for Militia officers beyond the annual training. As matters stand at present, it is one result that the only officers who are of any use during the annual training are those who have previously served during the preliminary two months. There is no doubt that it would be beneficial to the Militia service in general, if the old system of employing officers during preliminary drill were reverted to, and it would set at rest a great deal of dissatisfaction which now exists amongst officers."

VOLUNTEERS.

2nd Volunteer Battalion, Royal Fusiliers (late 23rd Middlesex Rifle Volunteers). The annual prize presentation will take place at St. James's Hall on Dec. 12, when the prizes will be given away by Lady Wolseley. Under its zealous and energetic commanding officer, Lieut.-Col. Routledge, this corps has been steadily improving in every respect for some years. It has now reached the limits of its establishment—804 of all ranks—and returns every man as "efficient."

COASTGUARD CIVIL DUTIES.

The general public seem to possess rather vague ideas concerning the number and nature of the duties performed by the Coastguard. We are accustomed to read almost daily ludicrous descriptions of the force in some periodical or another, which would lead those not knowing better to believe that it is maintained more for ornament than use. These descriptions occur mostly in stories the scene of which is laid at some fashionable sea-side resort. For this reason, a brief account of the duties performed by the force will be at least new to the public, and, perhaps, not altogether uninteresting. The modern Coastguard differs from its predecessor of thirty years ago in various respects. It has since then changed masters, the character of its personnel, and, to a certain extent, its duties. The old force was essentially a civil force, controlled by the Customs Department, and solely employed for the suppression of smuggling. The only qualifications a man required on joining was a robust frame and some small acquaintance with the management of a boat. As the object for which the Coastguard was first organised was accomplished, the duties in connection with it became nominal. Other duties, however, quickly devolved on the force, to keep its members employed, and its control was transferred to the Admiralty. It was then formed into a First Naval Reserve, by gradually recruiting it with well-drilled, well-trained seamen from the Royal Navy, who had served in all quarters of the world. To keep the men efficient in seamanship, they are embarked annually for a cruise, usually of two months' duration, and are during that period exercised aloft and at big-gun drill, while efficiency in small-arms is maintained by constant practice at the stations. As far as smuggling is concerned, though the business is at present almost extinct, still the Coastguard has to maintain such vigilance as to render the landing of a contraband cargo impossible. All inbound vessels are boarded and searched, and if from foreign parts, two men are usually placed on board until the Customs authorities take charge. The Coastguard has often a most disagreeable time of it on board some vessels. For instance, a week on board a French fishing-smack, alive with cockroaches, without a place to sleep in, and dependent for his fare on the caprice of the very people he is employed to watch, is often what the Coastguard has to put up with. His diet in such cases is not always congenial to an Englishman's palate, and on more than one occasion a Coastguardman has had a dish of snails set before him. This was an economical ruse on the part of the skipper, as through it his unwelcome guest drew his rations from other sources whenever possible during the remainder of his stay on board. Foremost among the other duties is that in connection with shipwreck. This includes the prevention of shipwreck, the saving of life, and the protection of derelict property. This duty involves a large amount of danger and hardship. The wild and shelterless coast has to be patrolled in the depth of winter and during the most inclement weather. Armed with a tuck-stick and revolver, and carrying a port-fire for signal purposes, the Coastguardman has to pace the cliffs; and no doubt, if his biographer had to keep him company on a shrill December night, his notions of pleasant and easy duty would be rather coolly and rudely dispelled. When a vessel is descried in distress, the Coastguard immediately, either by signal or personally, gives intimation of the matter at the station. The first object then looked to is the saving of life, and after that, the protection of the wrecked property. The lifeboat crew is summoned or the rocket apparatus is got out, according to circumstances. The latter is solely worked by the Coastguard, and in the course of a year a large number of lives are saved by it. Every winter, deeds of praiseworthy valour are done by men of the Coastguard round our coast. Performed, as they are frequently, in the dark, when that valuable personage, "our correspondent," is in the arms of Morpheus, and in remote localities distant from telegraphic and postal communication, such deeds get very little publicity beyond the immediate locality in which they occur, and seldom appear in print. When they do, they are merely mentioned in a few words, stating that the crew of a vessel was rescued by the rocket apparatus,—which, if reported in detail, would show much vigilance and daring on the part of the Coastguard. We often see a policeman's name paraded in print for capturing a petty thief, while the rescue of a number of lives from a watery grave, or from a position of extreme suffering and danger, by a Coastguard passes unrecorded. The result is, the general public are not fully alive to the value of the services rendered by the Coastguard. The number of Albert Medals, Royal Humane Society medals, and medals of various other institutions gained by members of the force, however, testify to the gallant deeds done in saving life. His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, who commanded the force for three years, eulogised it in well-merited terms on many occasions. From statistics then quoted, it appears that in a decade 2,696 lives were saved by the Coastguard, and in one year alone 657 lives were saved. These figures only give the number rescued by the rocket apparatus, and do not include those saved by boats and other means. But these alone sufficiently testify to the important services rendered by that valuable body. It would much increase the popularity of the force to have the number of lives saved, and other important items in connection with the force, published annually, as is the case with other institutions. Next in importance are the duties performed in connection with the fisheries. The supervision of the fisheries, the enforcement of fishery laws and the collecting annually of a variety of statistics are part of the duties of the Coastguard. In Ireland, in particular, where there are no fishery officers, the Coastguard have a great deal to do in connection with the fisheries. They have to suppress riots, arrest poachers, execute warrants, attend to the registration of boats, and, in fact, in this respect, act as constables. The Inspectors of Fisheries, in their annual reports, have frequently commended the valuable services rendered them by the officers and men of the Coastguard. In Ireland, also, the Coastguard are responsible for the suppression of illicit distillation within the line of their patrols. They visit the islands of the coast, in conjunction with the Constabulary, in search of the "mountain dew," and on such occasions Paddy greets them with every epithet in the Celtic vocabulary except a "caed mile failte." Besides the duties enumerated, the Coastguard perform various minor duties for the Board of Trade, Customs, and Sanitary authorities, such as preventing encroachment on foreshores, enforcing quarantine laws, and superintending the burial of the dead carcases washed ashore. In many instances, the station officers act as deputy receivers of wreck, fishery officers, and quarantine officers; and, in fact, in many remote localities they are the sole representatives of the Crown, and very often supply the place of guardians of the peace. From the foregoing, it will be seen that, though the purpose for which the Coastguard was first established has long ago been effected, other duties have devolved on the force which fully occupy the time and attention of its members, and in the execution of which any recurrence of smuggling is effectually prevented.

"Ex-Captain" writes:—"I read to-day, with great surprise, in your issue of Oct. 27, that an Army captain who had almost completed his ten years' half-pay service with the Militia had been brought back to full pay in a Line regiment. When I retired to half-pay in a similar manner in 1874 I was told officially that I should be compelled to retire at the end of the ten years, or forfeit my commission-money. Again, on being recommended in 1875 for the adjutancy of the Militia regiment I had joined, the reply given by the authorities was that I was not eligible, being on voluntary half-pay. The pension scheme came out about three years after I retired, and I should have tried my utmost to get back to full pay—had I believed it possible. As it is, I have just sold out, being within six months of the end of my ten years. I hope you will be able to throw some light on the subject." [We cannot.—Ed. A. & N. G.]

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1883.

THE latest "tip" from the War Office to the Press is worth consideration. If we are to take it as the indication of what the wire-pullers there are seeking to "attain," one of the most serious and the most dangerous of the reforms to which our hapless Army can be subjected is about to be let loose upon it. The seniority succession, which, in the case of battalion commands, is a sacred principle in every Army in the world, is to be set aside, and, as soon as "public opinion" is ripe for the change, the principle of selection, apparently unqualified by any restrictions as to grade, is to be adopted. When we say the principle of seniority succession is sacred in the great Armies of Europe, we are quite well aware that there are exceptions to the application of the rule. But these exceptions prove its existence. The command of a battalion, which in our service is the command of a regiment, is, we admit, the most important post in the whole of our stratocracy. It means, perhaps at a critical moment, the efficiency or the inferiority of a battalion abroad; and in a home battalion it means the preparation of the materials for active service so as to constitute, in cases where the Commanding Officer is very strong or very feeble, an element of strength or an element of weakness, as the case may be. But there are cases in which the battalion Lieutenant-Colonel may be a very capable man in barracks or on parade, and very bad in the field, and vice versâ; and there are other cases in which a Lieutenant-Colonel may be a very fair commanding officer, but may not be quite as smart as some brilliant Major or calculating Captain in his battalion, or on the list of the unemployed. As a general rule, we may take it that, except in the Cavalry, where the number of really good officers fit to command a regiment is very small, the majority of the Lieutenant-Colonels are quite as good and quite as well able to command battalions as the majority of the Majors. If selection could be worked without fear, favour, or affection, so that merit and fitness would alone be considered, and if the War Office could take the moral measure of a man as they can take the height of a recruit, we admit that the choice of the best men, in or out of the line of succession, would conduce greatly to the efficiency of the service, by ensuring an elevated standard of excellence for officers in command of battalions. It is because there is no such apparatus in Pall Mall, and because there is in the War Office, as elsewhere, scope for the exercise of likes and dislikes; because personal influence, occult agencies, prejudices and passions, the outcome of secret reports, the doings and undoings of favour and affection, are operative in the Horse Guards and in the Secretary of State's offices;—above all, it is because of the introduction of an element of uncertainty as to succession, where there is admitted fitness, founded on the dictum of some one or other that there is greater fitness elsewhere, that we view with distrust and alarm any measure, or the introduction of any regulation, which shall destroy the confidence of officers in their future, and shall give a heavy blow and great discouragement to the zealous and laborious men who have no political patrons or family friends to push them in among the number of the elect. Any one who is at all acquainted with the history of our Army can count scores of instances in which officers who would have been certainly passed over and set aside under a system of War-Office selection in peace time, became admirable battalion leaders and egregious commanders in front of an enemy. After all, as Moltke said, "The great business of an army is to prepare itself for war," and it is not by devices of the kind to which the Times referred, in connection with Lord Hartington's oracular speech, the British Army is to be regenerated. The heart-breaking work of a lieutenant-colonel, at Aldershot or elsewhere, in drilling his meagre battalion in a kind of Danaid tub, through the holes in which all his efficient soldiers are dribbling away, may well produce a condition of mind and action which would justify the War Office in putting him down as an inefficient and discontented officer, and passing him over for some smart, specious optimist, whose aptitude for troop-leading would vanish under fire. But one thing is pretty clear. If any officer who attains field rank fail to satisfy the authorities that he can be trusted with the command of a battalion when the time comes, he should be informed at once that he has no chance of succeeding. There are, indeed, instances in which that has been done, and in which the Horse Guards, after all, gave way; but weakness in the backbone of that kind should be cured, and if due care were taken in watching over promotions and selections in the field ranks, there seems to be no necessity for laying down a general principle that all commands of battalions should be made by selection, without reference to anything but fitness, for fitness in the case of the officers next in succession to the Lieutenant-Colonels of the battalions should be presumable. It looks very like an attempt to force the hand of the Commander-in-Chief on a matter respecting which his views are well known to recommend this innovation just at present, and it would tend towards the establishment of the complete control by the political and parliamentary influences of the Queen's Army, to which, we believe, sound constitutional principle and expediency are opposed, if the principle concealed in the feeler put forth by our contemporary were made the basis of action in filling up battalion commands.

Lord Wolseley's Memorandum on the Indian reliefs and the home establishment has caused a profound sensation in the camps at Pall Mall and Downing Street. One quality cannot be denied to the Saviour of Cairo, who may, after all, become the Saviour of more important places, and that is, frankness of speech and the courage of his convictions; and, in plain words, Lord Wolseley says the Indian reliefs cannot be furnished by our present establishment on short-service terms, and that it will be necessary to enlist 10,000 more men to work the reliefs in a satisfactory manner. Who is to pay for those legionaries? Great Britain, or India? That they are needed is proved by figures; but there will be nothing done to provide these twelve battalions till the money question is settled; and if England will not pay, India cannot. It is suggested that by recruiting men to equal the amount of home-going men from India, the home battalions would be kept up to the mark; but the difficulties of securing efficient material in the ranks for the Indian battalions are not to be easily overcome. The main point is that the Adjutant-General of the Queen's Army has informed the Secretary of State for War that the present system will not work, and that is a matter which fine writing in the Times, and fine words at public dinners, will not remedy. Lord Hartington, and the Lords of the Treasury, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer will have to deal with it, and perhaps even they will fail, unless they confess they erred greatly, and retrace their steps—not to long service and pensions, but to something very like them.

There is no reason to believe that the report which appeared in the papers, in connection with the recent overthrow of a detachment of Egyptian troops in Nubia, that Commander Moncrieff, R.N., who was Consul at one of the Red Sea ports, was killed or taken, rests on any solid foundation. The silence of Hicks Pasha in the Soudan is very strange. There is a telegraph-wire from Khartoum to Cairo, and, as there have been no despatches published at the latter place, it would seem as if the Mahde's people had cut off communications between Khartoum and Hicks Pasha's force, or that there was no good news from the latter to publish.

Major and Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Algernon Gordon-Lennox, Grenadier Guards, the new Aide-de-Camp to H.R.H. the Duke of Cambridge, joined the Army January 11, 1867; became Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel, October 1, 1877, and obtained his Majority, April 14, 1883. He served with the Grenadier Guards in Egypt, and was present at Tel-el-Kebir (medal with clasp and bronze star). A very good man for the place, and it is a compliment to the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, and to the family of soldiers to which he belongs, to put Lord Algernon into it.

The Pall Mall Gazette of last night, in an article on the War Game, recently revived at Aldershot, asserts that "neither the models nor the pieces which belong to them are new at all. They were designed, constructed, and worked by Captain Wilkinson Shaw, now retired Lieutenant-Colonel, when he was a Garrison-Instructor at Aldershot some seven or eight years ago; and it is now some five years ago or more since models were erected at London, Aldershot, Colchester, Devonport, the Curragh, and Woolwich." So far our contemporary—and we may add that we have just received a letter, in which a distinct claim to the original conception and execution of the models for the war game is made on behalf of Colonel Shaw.

When the Homburg manœuvres were in full swing, some weeks ago, the foreign Princes and officers who were in relations with the German chiefs, political and military, were taught to believe that a war between Germany and Russia, in which the latter would be the aggressor, was not only inevitable, but imminent. Especially was that point pressed on the English visitors, and it was very zealously argued that Great Britain should cast in her lot with Germany, and if she did, the terms of peace would include guarantees for the safety of the route to India and the security of Constantinople; whereas, if Germany were left to fight the battle alone, she must confine her views to the provinces nearer home, in which she had actual and immediate interests. The concentration of Russian corps on the frontier, the assemblage of independent cavalry divisions in the west at an unusual time of the year, the warlike spirit of the military party, the weakness of the Czar,—all these were duly set forth as grounds for immediate action; but now the visit of M. de Giers to Prince Bismarck, and the assurances he bears, have rolled away these clouds from the winter horizon, and we appear to be in for piping times of peace,—for the present.

Whilst Baker Pasha and Stevenson General are of opinion that it would be "madness," &c., to withdraw the British Army from Egypt, Wood Sirdar, and E. Baring, Financial Vizier, think that the force might be much reduced. Indeed, Sir Evelyn Wood is quite ready to answer for the maintenance of order, &c., against all domestic enemies, with his 6,000 Egyptians, of whom one brigade is under Egyptian officers, be it noted, the other being officered by Englishmen. Sir E. Baring is satisfied that one bagpiper, if his pipes were in order and he blew loud enough, would afford adequate protection to British interests, and warn off all foreign interlopers.

Major-General H. R. Browne proceeds next month to Barbadoes to take over the West-Indian command, as it is doubtful whether the promotion pace is quick enough to land him a Lieutenant-General before July, 1885, when, if unemployed, he would have been retired. This shows much kindly consideration at the Horse Guards.

It having been brought to the notice of the Lieutenant-General commanding at Aldershot that men proceeding from the Camp on furlough to Scotland are often detained for some days in London awaiting the sailing of the boats, he has directed commanding officers to take such steps as will prevent this, as far as possible, in future. Men proceeding to the North by boat are not to be allowed to leave the Camp until the evening previous to, or the early morning of, the day on which the steamer sails. There is much wisdom in this order, which has not been issued a day too soon.

It is only right to correct an erroneous impression which exists with regard to Colonel W. W. Lynch. Colonel Lynch was transferred a fortnight ago from the command of the Shrewsbury to that of the Guildford Regimental District, and it was thought that his removal might have been the result of the recent court-martial proceedings. This, however, is not the case. Colonel Lynch, as an old officer of the 2nd Queen's, had a claim to the command at Guildford, and it was in acknowledgment of this claim, and not as a punishment, that the Military authorities sanctioned his removal from Shrewsbury, as he thus became once more associated with his old regiment.

Captain Lewis, R.E., the officer sent out by the War Office to prepare plans for the defence of Aden, has left India, after submitting his designs to the Defence Committee and Government and obtaining their approval of them. We trust that the Duke of Connaught, whose arrival at that thirsty spot has just been telegraphed, took a look at the neglected works and armament over which poor "Steel Penn" broke his heart.

There was a goodly group of ladies and gentlemen assembled on Dover Pier on Monday forenoon, to bid "Good-bye" to one of the smartest and most popular officers in the Army, General Dormer, who returned to Egypt to occupy the position of Chief of the Staff and second-in-command, until the withdrawal of the whole British force from the country.

It having been found necessary to revise the Army Tables issued with Army Circular, dated December 1, 1877, showing the war strength and composition of all arms and branches, and the kit, equipment, and tentage required on service, a Consultative Committee, consisting of the following officers, has been formed at Aldershot by direction of H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, under the presidency of Colonel R. Harrison, C.B., C.M.G., A.Q.M.G.:—Colonel Dixon, 39th, for Infantry; Colonel Luck, C.B., 15th Hussars, for Cavalry; Lieutenant-Colonel Alleyne, Brigade-Major, R.A., for Artillery; Lieutenant-Colonel Hamilton, R.E., for Engineers; Assistant-Commissary-General Reeves, C.B., Commissariat and Transport Staff, for supply and transport; Surgeon-Major Gasteen, A.M.D., for medical arrangements; Captain Battersby, Ordnance Store Department, for ordnance stores. A secretary has not yet been appointed.

A correspondent who happens to be quartered in a district where the contract-rate for coals is comparatively low, has, in consequence, had his fuel and light allowance considerably reduced. Fondly imagining that he would make up for this reduction by getting his coals from the contractor, he applied to the commissariat officer for permission, but was informed by him that the contractor was not bound to supply private individuals. Under these circumstances, can a low contract for coals be any justification for reducing the allowance? Echo and common-sense answer "No!"

Although the Wallace spade has been approved as the British intrenching tool, it does not yet form a portion of the Infantry soldier's equipment, owing, it is said, to difficulty in attaching it to the body. This matter has now been under experiment and discussion for a twelvemonth at least, and it seems as far from being settled as ever. Experiments are still being made as to the best mode of carrying the Wallace spade, and there the matter at present rests, and is likely to remain. None of these pressing matters ever seem to get beyond the experimental stage. This, however, can scarcely be wondered at, seeing that the Army itself is in the same unhappy condition, and cannot somehow be "made to fit."

The Times, in its article of Tuesday last on Lord Hartington's military policy, says:—"Officers must be selected who are likely to govern successfully the greatly improved element now largely represented in the ranks." There surely is no reason to suppose that as soldiers become improved intellectually, socially, or morally, they are more difficult to govern. If this were the case, the more highly educated corps would be less tractable than those the ranks of which are filled by men of a lower average of education; and we should find a preponderance of crime in the Household Cavalry and Royal Engineers. Facts prove the contrary. The Times is most unhappy in its military criticism.

With reference to our remarks of last week regarding the declaration required from retired and half-pay officers, a new certificate for General officers has been substituted, omitting the statement "that they are not in holy orders" since Mr. Childers's compulsory retirement scheme came into force, it would seem that the Military powers have mercifully relented as far as debarring the Church is concerned, and the lives of these wretched retired middle-aged ones need no longer be wasted, if they can only bring themselves to feel that they have a call to use the weapons of the Church Militant, vice their discarded sabres. If the practice is to prevail of certain favoured Generals, like the late Assistant Military Secretary, being given two appointments ere less fortunate ones without interest get anything, and there is much shelving of junior Generals in consequence, we may ere long see retired honorary Lieutenant-Generals officiating in the pulpit, as well as scores of their more youthful brethren of the sword,

The Navy.

NAVAL KNIGHTS OF WINDSOR.

ADMIRALTY, November 12, 1883.

The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty do hereby give notice to such Lieutenants of the Royal Navy, and to such Lieutenants retired with the rank of Commander, as are desirous of being recommended for the appointment of Naval Knight of Windsor, under the will of the late Samuel Travers, Esq., that they must apply at this office, either personally or by letter, on or before the 15th day of December next, when they will be informed of the nature of the certificates and testimonials which are required to show that they come within the meaning of the will, an extract from which is herewith appended:—"These gentlemen are to be superannuated or disabled Lieutenants of English men-of-war, single men, without children, inclined to lead a virtuous, studious, and devout life; to be removed if they give occasion for scandal." By the Act 30 and 31 Victoria, cap. 100, widowers are deemed single men within the meaning of the will in question.

ADMIRALTY, November 9, 1883.

In accordance with the provisions of her Majesty's Order in Council of July 21, 1876, Commander Alfred Frederick Marescaux, having attained 15 years' seniority as Commander on the 4th inst., has been authorised to assume the rank and title of Retired Captain from the same date.

ADMIRALTY, November 13, 1883.

Assistant-Engineer John White Midgley has been promoted to the rank of Engineer in her Majesty's Fleet, with seniority of November 6.

APPOINTMENTS.

Alecto, Lieut. and Com. Harston, returned to Accra on Oct. 4 from Little Popo and Quitta, and left the next day for Fernando Po to coal, and would then join the squadron at the Nun entrance of the River Niger.

Alexandra, Capt. Rawson, C.B., flagship of Vice-Admiral the Lord John Hay, K.C.B., was at Smyrna on Oct. 31. The following ships were at Chesmeh, the scene of the recent earthquake:—The Monarch, Temeraire, Carysfort, Helicon, and Invincible. They would join the flag on Nov. 4, and leave about the 5th inst. for Malta to be docked. The Superb, Inflexible, Cockatrice, and Coquette were at Malta where the Inflexible arrived on the 29th, and the Coquette on Oct. 30. The Condor is ordered from Tunis to Malta. The Cruiser was on a cruise of instruction. The Iris, at Port Said, would, on relief by the Invincible, about the 22nd inst., proceed to Malta. The Cygnet was at Alexandria, the Falcon at Constantinople, and the Bittern en route to Gibraltar from Sierra Leone. The Commander-in-Chief was at Smyrna on Nov. 13, with the squadron, and would leave for Milo the same day. Mails to be sent to Malta, except for Carysfort, address Cyprus. The Iris was to leave Port Said for Malta about Nov. 24. A correspondent, writing to the Western Morning News, on Oct. 29, from Smyrna, says:—"Our stay at Sigri was but short, as the day after we arrived there news reached us of the earthquake at Chesmeh, with the usual exaggerated reports as to the number of deaths and the great destruction of property. The facts were sufficiently bad without calling for any exaggeration. The deaths are upwards of a hundred in number, and the wounded are very numerous. On the day when the news was brought to us the Admiral despatched the Carysfort to the scene of the disaster, and followed with the Invincible on the next morning. The doctors and crews were busily employed attending to the maimed, and digging out the killed and wounded from amongst the ruins. It was a sorry sight. Some of the bodies were frightfully mangled, while many persons who were still alive had arms and legs broken and smashed to such an extent that in numerous cases amputation of both limbs was an imperative necessity. The shocks of earthquake have been felt all along the coast of Asia Minor, Vourla being considerably shaken. Several houses there were levelled, and there were several fatalities among the inhabitants. Smyrna has also suffered, and the inhabitants have been kept in a state of excitement and alarm, and in momentary dread of the city being wrecked. The Temeraire and Monarch have been here since the 22nd, and leave has been given to the crews. The death had occurred on board the Temeraire of the man mentioned in a former letter who was injured by the capsizing of a gun in the launch. He was buried on Wednesday at the English cemetery outside the town. The Helicon will leave here to-morrow with the Commander-in-Chief and several of the captains on a visit to Constantinople, and will be away for several days. A rumour is current that the Superb, Temeraire, Iris, and Carysfort are to pay off early in January, and recommissioned directly afterwards, the new crews being sent out in the Himalaya and Orontes. The dockyard at Malta will have more work than it is possible for its limited staff to do, as the Superb and Temeraire have a great many defects that require attention, in addition to which the Inflexible will occupy some months in having alterations and defects made good. We expect to be here until the 10th prox., after which the fleet will break up, and the ships be sent to different ports. Some will probably go to Malta."

Algerine, Com. A. G. Fullerton, left Accra on Oct. 5 for Fernando Po to coal, with orders to rendezvous at the Nun entrance of the River Niger on Oct. 14, to take part in an expedition against the King of Abo.

Amethyst, Capt. Brent, senior officer on the South-east Coast of America, with the Rifleman and Sylvia, was at Monte Video on Oct. 17, and would remain there. The Rambler and Wrangler were on passage to Monte Video.

Audacious, Capt. Tracey, flagship of Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes, C.B., was at Yokohama on Oct. 5.

Bittern, Com. Mann, was at Sierra Leone on Oct. 21. The Bittern was detached from the Mediterranean Squadron on special service to tow a small steamer (purchased during the late affair in Egypt) to Sierra Leone, where it will be taken on by one of the West-Coast Squadron for service at the Cape. The Bittern left Sierra Leone to return to the Mediterranean station on Oct. 22.

Boadicea, Capt. Church, flagship of Rear-Admiral Nowell Salmon, V.C., left Simon's Bay on Oct. 24 for Angra Pequena, and would return to Simon's Bay. The Opal was at Ascension on Oct. 2; would leave for Fernando Po on Oct. 3, arriving there about the 11th, and was to be at Simon's Bay by Christmas. The Algerine was at St. Helena on Sept. 26, whence she sailed for Cape Coast Castle, and would join the Opal at the mouth of the Niger with the Lordships' orders for the Niger expedition. On relief by the Frolic she will proceed to the South-east Coast of America. The Bullfrog was at St. Helena on Sept. 26, and left for St. Paul's de Loando with orders to the Flirt to join the Opal at Fernando Po. If not required on the Southern Sub-division, she would proceed to Fernando Po. The Flirt, on Southern Sub-division, would proceed to Fernando Po on relief by Bullfrog, and after the Niger expedition will proceed to St. Helena and await orders for England. Mails for St. Helena till packet of 2nd inst. The Stork and Alecto, at Cape Coast Castle, were to join the Opal at the mouth of the River Niger. The Starling, at St. Helena on Sept. 26, was to proceed to Akassa Creek, River Niger, to make arrangements for pilots.

Briton, Capt. Kennedy, arrived at Tamatave from Zanzibar on Nov. 1. A correspondent writing from the latter place says:—"There has been a great deal of sickness on board the Briton, more men having been invalided from her since she came here in May last than during the rest of the commission, and the health of the crew has not improved since she returned from Aden, to which she carried despatches soon after the bombardment of Tamatave. There is a very general belief on board that she will be home by this time next year, although she was not commissioned at Devonport until April, 1881. It will be remembered that she was commissioned for the West Coast of Africa, from which she was to proceed to the West Indies, but instead of that she was ordered to the Cape, and from thence to this station."

Dido, Capt. Vander-Meulen, was at Port Royal on Oct. 25.

Dryad, Com. Johnstone, returned on Oct. 27 to Tamatave from the North and East coasts of Madagascar. She reports that the French war vessel Boursaint has bombarded the town of Foullepont.

Espiègle, Capt. Cyprian A. G. Bridge, has been making an unusually long and interesting cruise amongst the Pacific Islands. She was at Yap, in the Western Carolines, on Aug. 20, preparing to start on her return to Sydney. The cruise had already extended to nearly 8,000 nautical miles, and the whole distance traversed was expected to amount to close upon 11,000 before it could be completed. The ship left Sydney in April, and called at the Fiji Islands; our recent annexation, Rotumah; the Ellice, Gilbert, and Marshall groups of low coral atolls; Kusaie, Ponape, and Nukuor, in the more Eastern Carolines; Greenwich Island; the Duke of York group, New Britain; and the Pelew Islands. The natives were everywhere perfectly friendly. More than once the natives were much disappointed at being unable to sell to the Espiègle the copra (dried cocoa-nut pulp), which they had collected to dispose of to passing traders. The extraordinary and gigantic ruins at Metalanim Harbour in Ponape, as well as the less considerable, but still very remarkable, remains of buildings at Chabrol Harbour, in Kusiae, were inspected with much interest by the officers. Advantage was taken of the Espiègle's presence at several islands at which wars were going on to get the chiefs to meet and make peace. The principal kings of the Pelew group not only ceased fighting, but agreed to stop the barbarous practice of making raids into the neighbouring territories for the purpose of procuring human heads. The success that attended the efforts made to persuade the chiefs in the various places to end their wars gave great satisfaction to the natives in general, and is sure to have an excellent effect on trade, which had been materially injured by the constant hostilities of the last few years. The ship unfortunately at an early stage of the cruise lost an officer, the chief engineer, who died of bronchitis. The officers and crew generally have been remarkably healthy, though the heat has been excessive, and the weather, though usually fine, extremely trying to Europeans. Great difficulty was found in getting supplies, even fruit being scarce at many places. The Espiègle was expected to be at Sydney by October 1.

Euphrates, Capt. Cardale, left Bombay on Nov. 10.

Euryalus, Capt. Hastings, C.B., flagship of Rear-Admiral Sir W. N. W. Hewett, K.C.B., V.C., was at Zanzibar up to October 11, and has since arrived at Aden. The Briton, the Tourmaline, the Dragon, and the Osprey were at Zanzibar at that date. The Arab would shortly be ordered from Bombay to Trincomalee and Rangoon. The Harrier and the Undine would leave, when ready, for Australia, convoyed by a sloop as far as Mozambique, where they would call.

Fantôme, Com. Grey, was at Port-au-Prince up to Oct. 18.

Harrier, Lieut. and Com. Scott Willcox, was at Zanzibar on Nov. 2.

Malabar, Capt. Hand, arrived at Suez on Nov. 13, and was to leave next day for Portsmouth.

Mallard, Lieut. and Com. Littledale, left Port Royal on Oct. 17 to cruise round the Island of Jamaica for a fortnight.

Nelson, Comdre. Erskine, A.D.C., was at Sydney up to Oct. 4, and was to leave Sydney about the end of the month for Melbourne, Adelaide, and Hobart Town. The Diamond, which was at Suva, Fiji, on Sept. 7, was about to proceed on a cruise in the South Sea Islands. The Espiègle, which arrived at Sydney on Oct. 3, would remain there for the present. The Miranda, at Sydney, would be ready for sea on Oct. 15. The Dart was at Ambrym Island, New Hebrides, on Aug. 15, and was about to proceed to the Solomon and New Britain Islands. The Lark was employed off the Solomon Islands, to carry out surveying orders.

Northampton, Capt. Digby, flagship of Vice-Admiral Sir J. E. Commerell, K.C.B., V.C., was at Halifax on Nov. 10. The Himalaya left Halifax the same day.

Opal, Capt. Brooke, senior officer on the West Coast of Africa, was at St. Helena with the cruising squadron on Oct. 1. Had been ordered to form an expedition to ascend the Niger, and would be off the Nun entrance on Oct. 14.

Sheldrake, Lieut. and Com. M. L. Bridger, was paid off at Plymouth on Nov. 10.

Stork, Lieut. and Com. Blennerhasset, has been ordered to the Nun entrance of the River Niger by Oct. 14, to take part in an expedition against the King of Abo.

Swinger, Lieut. and Com. Marx, arrived at St. Vincent, Cape de Verde, on Nov. 15; would leave on Nov. 17 for Cape of Good Hope.

Undine, Lieut. and Com. Cutfield, was at Tamatave on Oct. 22.

The Admiralty have decided that instead of taking the Polyphemus to Chatham, the boilers will be taken to the ship at Portsmouth, where she will be docked. The officers of the two yards have had a consultation as to the best means of getting the boilers on board with as little derangement to the ship as possible. The necessary alterations in her torpedo arrangements will be simultaneously taken in hand by the factory department.

Three new war-vessels, building for the Government by private contract, will be out of hand before the close of the present year, namely, the Phaeton, the Dolphin, and the Wanderer. The latter will be handed over to the naval authorities in a few days, a navigating party from Sheerness Naval Barracks proceeding to Middlesborough, to receive them from the contractors, Messrs. Dixon and Company.

Capt. Gooch, R.N., speaking recently at Bristol, on resigning the command of that brigade of the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers, said, with regard to the general outlook of the Naval Volunteer movement, that at present everything was hung up until the Admiralty and the War Office had come to a decision on the report of the Commercial Harbours Defence Committee. As this report had been before the authorities for some months, he hoped they might soon hear what conclusion they had arrived at with reference to the Naval Artillery Volunteers. In the meantime, the Naval Volunteers must wait quietly. The Naval Volunteer movement had now spread round the coasts of England, Scotland, and Wales. The Admiralty within the last two years had received offers from hundreds of citizens eager to be enrolled in the force. Within the last six weeks Cardiff had made the Government a second offer of a strong Naval Volunteer Corps; Newport and Sharpness had also told the Admiralty that they were ready with their batteries; Swansea, as they all knew, had a flourishing corps. Glasgow and Greenock at this moment were agitating for permission to enroll Naval Volunteers to defend the Clyde; Dundee had come to the front with four batteries for the defence of the Tay. London, Brighton, and Hastings had had crack Naval Volunteer Corps for many years; and every leading seaport on the east and south coast of the kingdom had taken up the movement. Here in the west they had Liverpool, Bristol, Birkenhead, Southport, Bangor, Carnarvon, and Swansea with corps of Naval Artillery Volunteers already in existence. And the movement was not confined to Great Britain, for it had extended to India and the Colonies. Calcutta had received permission to organise a Naval Volunteer Brigade, and he trusted that they might shortly hear that Bombay and Rangoon had followed her example. The Naval Volunteer question was occupying the attention of the Dominion of Canada; and in Australia they found New South Wales, Victoria, and Tasmania forming large Colonial Naval Brigades. A movement so popular, so widely spread, so patriotic, and so truly British, must contain strong elements of vitality, and was not likely to die of premature decay. A few years ago the Royal Naval Artillery Volunteers were scarcely known, but he hoped that in a few years hence the name would be a household word in every town on the vast seaboard of our great Empire.

The Admiralty have decided to add to the Navy a torpedo ship, exclusively intended to discharge torpedoes. The ship will embody some new departures in naval architecture. She will be capable of making a long sea passage, and having an exceptionally high rate of speed. The new craft will be infinitely superior in size and capabilities to the Hecla, and altogether different in design to the Polyphemus.

A new first-class torpedo-boat was received on Thursday at Portsmouth from Messrs. Thornycroft and Co., of Chiswick. It is the first of the kind introduced in the service, its propulsion being a resuscitation of the Ruthvin hydraulic system as fitted to the Waterwitch. As applied to torpedo craft, there are several advantages attending the use of the turbine, such as a reduction of noise and increased handiness, the only drawback being as regards speed. The boat is expected to realise 12 knots.

THE CASE OF LIEUTENANT CONWAY-GORDON, R.M.A.

"SIR,—I have laid before my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty your letter of the 2nd inst., stating that you trust their Lordships will not object to your 'publishing the whole circumstances of the case' of your son, Lieut. Lewis Conway-Gordon, together with the correspondence respecting his status in the Royal Marine Artillery. My Lords desire me to inform you that they have no objection to your publishing the correspondence. The facts of the case are as follows:—Under the rules hitherto in force, lieutenants of the Royal Marine Artillery have not been confirmed in their appointments until they have undergone instruction, and passed satisfactory examinations at the Royal Naval College, and in Naval gunnery and torpedo. Probationers who failed to pass the final college examination have been, at the discretion of the Admiralty, granted commissions in the Marine Light Infantry, with seniority from the date of appointment to the Artillery, on probation. Owing to the numerous failures to qualify (19 out of 26 probationers having failed in the past four years), this system did not secure a sufficient supply of officers, and consequently, there were in August last, 19 vacancies for subalterns in the Royal Marine Artillery. After careful consideration of the circumstances of the case, my Lords came to the conclusion that it was desirable to take steps for the revision of the conditions of appointment, also that it was necessary to fill some of the vacancies in the corps at once; they therefore appointed a Committee, consisting of the President of the College, Vice-Admiral Luard, C.B.; the Director of Studies, Dr. Hirst; the Assist.-Adjt.-Gen. of Royal Marines, Sir Francis Festing, K.C.M.G., C.B.; the Professor of Fortification at the College, Major Needham, R.M.A., to report upon the advisability of changing the system of selection of probationers; also to recommend for transfer from the Light Infantry to the Artillery some of the most eligible of the probationers who had failed during the past three years. Amongst the gentlemen recommended by the Committee were Lieuts. H. Slessor and A. H. Cox, who had failed at the final College examination in June, 1882, and had been appointed to the Infantry, with seniority of Sept. 1, 1880. My Lords decided to permit the transfer of these officers to the Artillery, subject to the condition of qualifying in gunnery and torpedo, a condition which your son must comply with, before he can be finally confirmed in his appointment. It then became a question what should be their status in relation to your son; it appeared to my Lords that, as the transfer was in the interests of the public service, it would be right to allow them the full benefit of their position and seniority in the corps of Royal Marines; they were therefore transferred as lieutenants of Sept. 1, 1880, and placed above your son, who entered a year later. My Lords have given full consideration to the letters which you have addressed to them on the subject, but they are unable to recognise any valid grounds for the protest which you have made against their decision in this matter. I am to request that this letter may be made public, should you publish the correspondence.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

G. TRYON."

"Newport Cottage, Lincoln, Oct. 29, 1883.

"To the Secretary of the Admiralty, Whitehall.

"SIR,—I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, 'N,' dated Oct. 20, 1883, informing me that the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty 'have no objection' to my publishing certain correspondence connected with the position of my son, Lieut. Lewis Conway-Gordon, in the Royal Marine Artillery, for which consideration I am obliged. Adverting to the body of the above-quoted letter, I would most respectfully make the following remarks:—'The facts of the case,' as noted therein, are neither correctly nor fully quoted, as I now beg to point out. 1. My son accepted, in 1881, his probationary lieutenancy in the Royal Marine Artillery, under the Regulations issued by the Lords of the Admiralty, dated Sept. 12, 1879, wherein (see para. 4) it is stated that such officers, on passing the second examination at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, 'satisfactorily, will receive commissions in the Royal Marine Artillery.' The question of further examinations in 'naval gunnery and torpedo' was only brought forward under later regulations, issued by their Lordships on Feb. 8, 1883; and so are not in any way binding on my son, as is evidenced by his being gazetted to his commission in the Royal Marine Artillery on Aug. 14 last. My son received on July 15, 1883, a letter dated 'Royal Naval College, Greenwich, July 14, 1883,' forwarded 'on her Majesty's service,' signed 'F. E. Raven' (copy attached hereto), informing him that as he had 'succeeded . . . . . . in obtaining sufficient marks to qualify for the Marine Artillery,' he was to report himself at Portsmouth, 'in time to enter upon the torpedo course . . . . . . on July 18.' Such an official notice I, with all submission, maintain completed the time of his probation, and he should have been at once gazetted to the position he, according to regulations, had honourably gained. Therefore, the argument, founded on the basis of my son being still a probationary lieutenant, when superseded, now raised by their Lordships, is both illusory and misleading. 2. The committee which their Lordships appointed 'to report upon the advisability of changing the system of selection of probationers; also to recommend for transfer from the Light Infantry to the Artillery some of the most eligible of the probationers who had failed during the past three years,' recommended with Lieuts. Slessor and Cox, Lieut. H. C. Fraser (seniority, 1877), and Lieut. C. E. Hardy (seniority, 1878), and were careful not to make any recommendation as to the seniority which these officers should take. But Lieuts. Fraser and Hardy have not been transferred to the Artillery. It is, therefore, evident that their Lordships exercised, outside the recommendation of their Committee, their authority, both in the selection of such officers as should be transferred, and also as to the position such transfers should take. 'The interests of the public service' would have been equally served if Messrs. A. E. Marchant (with 3,100 marks), C. L. Gordon (with 2,907 marks), B. H. Lee (with 2,871 marks), E. C. B. Roe (with 2,760 marks), and B. C. Couchman (with 2,696 marks), had been allowed to join the Artillery branch, for which, according to the results of the final examination at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, they were more fitted than Mr. Aubrey Cox, who obtained only 2,627 marks. 3. From 'the facts of the case,' as submitted by their Lordships, the following prominent and most important one is omitted, viz., that the course pursued by their Lordships in transferring Lieuts. Slessor and Cox to the Artillery was in complete opposition to the advice of Sir Charles Adair, G.C.B., the Deputy-Adjutant-General of Marine Forces, the officer at Head-quarters who is supposed to represent that branch of the service, and advise their Lordships on the special points connected therewith. 4. I note with satisfaction the admissions made by their Lordships (first), that 19 out of 26 probationers for the Royal Marine Artillery have failed during the past four years; and (secondly), that Lieuts. Slessor and Cox were transferred, subject to certain conditions. On such admissions I would remark,—first, that as my son was one of the seven passed probationers, the interests of the service would dictate that he should have priority to those officers who had failed in these examinations; and secondly, that as 'conditions' were placed on the transfer of the two above-named officers, a further one as to their seniority in the Artillery should also have been enforced, so that an officer who failed at the final examination at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich, taking only 2,627 marks, should not have been rewarded for such failure by being placed over the head of my son, a successful probationer with 3,943 marks. 5. With reference to the paragraph in which it is stated that their Lordships 'are unable to recognise any valid grounds for the protest' I have made, I would respectfully draw the attention of their Lordships to the letter of the Deputy-Adjutant-General on the subject, which will, I believe, be found to give 'valid grounds' to my protest; moreover, I would inform their Lordships that the position I have taken up is one which is in full agreement with the opinions of a late First Secretary to the Admiralty, of Admirals, of Generals, of officers of all ranks in both services, of the general public, and of both the service and the general Press. 6. I can only once more place on record my respectful, but firm and indignant protest against the punishment my son has most undeservedly received, which will delay his promotion to the higher positions in the corps by over five years, and give expression to my deep regret that the honour and justice of the Department should be so sadly dimmed in the hands of the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant, F. C. CONWAY-GORDON, Lieut.-Col., Deputy Lieutenant county of Lincoln."

Royal Naval College, Greenwich, S.E., July 14, 1883.

DEAR SIR,—I am desired to inform you that as you succeeded at the recent examination in obtaining sufficient marks to quality for the Marine Artillery, you should proceed to Portsmouth, in time to enter on the torpedo course which commences in Vernon on the 18th inst. at 9 a.m.—Yours faithfully, F. E. RAVEN.

Lieut. L. Conway-Gordon, R.M.A.

NAVAL GUNNERY.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Your able review, in the Army and Navy Gazette of November 3, on progress in Naval Gunnery, must be read with great interest by all thoughtful Naval officers; and I think we have now fair proofs that the present system of firing is, as a test of efficiency, valueless. Much has been said of late years of the decadence of seamanship, but I think we ought now to consider, what is of far greater importance, the decadence of gunnery. The causes of this falling-off are not, I think, difficult to arrive at, and are, in my opinion, as follows. There has been, of late, an idea amongst the older officers of the Navy that none of those under them know anything about seamanship, resulting in such orders being given, and such systems (especially on some distant stations) being carried out, as to entirely subordinate the now all-important gunnery to the practically obsolete seamanship, and my own experience of late years has shown that far more credit is awarded for crossing royal yards than for the efficiency of the ship for action. I further do not hesitate to say that while the present strain as regards seamanship is kept on, no real efficiency will be arrived at in gunnery. Another difficulty experienced by captains of ships is in the absurd regulations by which the Excellent binds them down as regards how the ammunition is to be expended, and the small amount to be fired; the eight rounds per quarter must be divided into three, and expended so many rounds per month, whatever the circumstances or weather may be, resulting in favourable opportunities being lost and ammunition often literally thrown away, the firing having to be hurried over for want of time, and perhaps in bad weather. The present system of prize-firing also is faulty in the extreme; the gun's crew know that they must get the eight rounds off while the ship is running eight knots on one side of the square; otherwise, they are almost sure to lose through taking enough of time, besides the black looks of the officers at having to put the ship on another side of the square, in order to give them time to finish. Again, the distances that the shots fall from the target are merely a matter of the officer's judgment who is stationed in the top, and it is needless to remark that such estimates differ considerably. A great improvement in prize-firing might be made if the target were towed, all ships now possessing steamboats, when the errors in elevation could be taken by the officers in the boat direction from the ship. But I may say finally what I said at first, that no marked improvement can take place in our "gunnery," upon which the very existence of our Navy in war depends, while it is made entirely subordinate to playing at seamanship.—I am, &c.,

NOT A GUNNERY OFFICER.

London Amusements.

The Promenade Concerts, COVENT GARDEN, will close on the 24th inst. Mr. A. Gwyllym Crowe has arranged a benefit concert for this (Saturday) evening; and for the 22nd inst. Mr. Thomas has engaged Madame Lemmens Sherrington, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Signor Foli, and Mr. Sims Reeves.

From the HAYMARKET, "Fédora" will be withdrawn after this week, and a new and original comedy by Mr. A. W. Pinero will then be produced. The announced date of the production is next Saturday, and the cast comprises the names of Mrs. Stirling, Mrs. Bancroft, Mrs. Bernard-Beere, Miss Calhoun, Mr. Bancroft, Mr. Forbes Robertson, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Mr. Brookfield, Mr. Stewart Dawson, and Mr. Vernon.

"The Silver King," at the PRINCESS's, continuously played throughout the entire year, with only a fortnight's interval for a holiday rest, reached this week the anniversary of its production. This admirable drama will be represented for the last time at a morning performance on the 24th inst., and the theatre will then be closed for night rehearsals of the new romantic play, entitled, "Claudian," comprising a prologue and three acts. The drama, written by Mr. W. G. Wills, and constructed by Mr. Henry Herman, will be produced on Thursday, the 29th inst.

At the SAVOY THEATRE, the fairy opera of "Iolanthe," by W. S. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan, shows no sign of diminished popularity, though a year has elapsed since this fantastic production became a fixture in the programme. A supplementary musical and mimetic sketch, called "The Drama on Crutches," is now provided by Mr. George Grossmith, who thus adds a merry quarter-of-an-hour's amusement to a thoroughly diverting entertainment. Asking the audience to imagine they have already advanced twenty years into the next century, and are listening to the recollections of an old playgoer who could tell them something about the Stage as it existed forty years before, the clever mimic and musician gives adroit imitations of Mr. Henry Irving, Mr. J. L. Toole, Mr. Corney Grain, and other public favourites, besides supplying humorous references to the peculiar style of himself and his colleagues.

Mrs. Alfred Maddick appeared on Tuesday afternoon at the CRYSTAL PALACE as Julia in "The Hunchback," and will next week depart for New York, to fulfil a prolonged engagement with Mr. Boucicault for a professional tour through the United States.

In the early part of next month, Mr. Harry Jackson will open the OPERA COMIQUE, for the purpose of introducing the popular American actress and singer, favourably known as "Lotta," to the British Stage.

"Vice Versâ" and the burlesque of "Silver Guilt" will be withdrawn from the STRAND THEATRE at the end of this month, and for the following six weeks that stage will be occupied by Mr. Edward Compton and his comedy company. Before, however, the present tenure expires, a new two-act comedy will be brought out, entitled, "Deceivers Ever," the author being a son of Mr. Charles Salaman, the well-known musical lecturer and composer.

The present programme at the GAIETY will be changed on Monday, Dec. 10, when Mr. Edward Terry returns to the theatre. In the meantime, the morning performances at this house will increase in number. This week Mr. W. F. Hawley produced another new comedy-drama, called "Found," and Miss Lucille Meredith, announced as "the American prima donna," made her first appearance in England as Phœbe in the comic opera of "Billee Taylor." On Wednesday next, Miss Nelly Bromley has a matinée, and appears as Peg Woffington in "Masks and Faces." The week following, Mr. Hermann Vezin is announced to play Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice."

Miss Lucille Meredith, the new American prima donna, made her first appearance in this country at the GAIETY matinée, in "Billee Taylor," on Thursday last. The cast was a powerful one, and included Miss Alice Aynsley Cook, Miss Harriet Coveney, Miss Pedley, Mr. Breedon, Mr. J. J. Dallas, Mr. Arthur Williams, and Mr. William Elton. Miss Meredith made a most favourable impression, though evidently suffering from nervousness. Her voice is a clear and high soprano which should not fail to make its owner an English favourite. Of the rest of the cast, we need only say that Messrs. Williams, Elton, and Dallas, and Miss Coveney were great in their respective characters; that Miss Alice Aynsley Cook sustained her histrionic and vocal reputation as Arabella, and that Miss Pedley (Susan) is a young lady who ought to be sought after by comic-opera managers. She gained a hearty encore for her solo in the first act. The dresses were unusually effective, and we can safely say that those who go to see "Billee Taylor" on Thursday next, Nov. 22, when it will be repeated, will have a most enjoyable treat.

Such rapid progress has been made in the under-water engine fittings of the Impérieuse at Portsmouth, that it is intended to float her out of dock on Dec. 18, instead of early next year. It has, however, been determined to postpone the fitting of the after portion of the propeller shafting until she has been docked, the apertures in her stern being plugged up in the meantime.

A draft of supernumeraries left the Royal Naval Barracks, Sheerness, on Nov. 12, for Plymouth, to join the Agincourt and the Indus. Another draft of men also left for the Pacific station, taking passage to Colon in the Wye. A draft left on Saturday in the steam tender Seamew, for the ironclad Penelope, to take the place of time-expired men, who return to the Royal Naval Barracks.

EPPS'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—Civil Service Gazette.—Made simply with boiling water or milk. Sold only in packets, labelled—"JAMES EPPS and Co., Homœopathic Chemists, London."—Also makers of Epps's Chocolate Essence.

EXAMINATION FOR PROMOTION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—On page 741, para. 2, of your edition of Sept. 22, you allude to the large number of officers who failed to pass for promotion at the recent examination. From all I hear from brother-officers in England and elsewhere, the failures were nearly all in the tactical and topographical papers, which, in addition to being very hard, were of a catch-question type, and by no means a criterion of a man's ability or taste for his profession. I am one of the unfortunates who failed at the examination in question in the subjects I have mentioned. Had I had time at the examination, I would have made copies of the questions set, and forwarded them, so that in your journal you might have the opportunity of drawing attention to the nature of the questions propounded; but the questions had to be returned, together with the replies, for which, en passant, time was barely permitted to answer. I have no hesitation in saying that the stiffness of these so-called tests of military knowledge for command is and will be the cause, until rectified, of many good officers having to leave the service (as in my case), to the great detriment of the service and to their advancement in a profession in which they have served the best portion of their lives.—I am, &c.,

A DISQUALIFIED F. O.

HEADACHES AND DISORDERED STOMACH.—"After suffering for nearly two-and-a-half years from severe headache and disordered stomach, and after trying almost everything, and spending much money without finding any benefit, I was recommended to try your Fruit Salt. Before I had finished one bottle, I found it doing me a great deal of good, and now I am restored to my usual health. Others I know that have tried it have not enjoyed such good health for years.—Yours truly, ROBERT HUMPHREYS, Post Office, Barrasford." CAUTION.—Legal rights are protected in every civilised country. Examine each bottle, and see the Capsule is marked "ENO'S FRUIT SALT." Without it, you have been imposed upon by worthless imitations. Sold by all Chemists, price 2s 9d and 4s 6d. Directions in Sixteen Languages,—How to Prevent Disease. Prepared only at ENO'S FRUIT SALT WORKS, Hatcham, London, S.E., by J. C. ENO'S Patent.

Obituary.

Gen. Arthur Bunny, C.B., late of the Royal (Bengal) Horse Artillery, died on the 9th inst. at his residence, 40 Addison Gardens, Kensington. His war services, as recorded in Hart's Army List, were as follows:—

"Lieut.-Gen. Bunny served in the Sutlej Campaign in 1846, and was present at the battle of Sobraon (medal). Punjab Campaign of 1848-49, including the first and second siege operations before Mooltan and surrender of the fortress, actions of Sept. 12 (wounded) and Nov. 7, on which last occasion when in command of two Horse Artillery guns he was particularly brought to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief in Gen. Whish's despatch; afterwards present at the battle of Goojerat (medal with two clasps). Indian Mutiny in 1857-58, including the battle of Budleekeserai, siege and capture of Delhi (slightly wounded July 23), battles of Bolundshuhur and Agra, relief of Lucknow by Lord Clyde (mentioned in despatches), battle of Cawnpore, taking of Futtehghur, was brigade-major of the Siege Artillery at the siege of Lucknow (mentioned in despatches). Present with Walpole's column as Staff officer of Artillery at the attack on Fort Rooya and action of Allygunge (mentioned in despatch); present at the battle of Bareilly (mentioned), and actions of Mohumdee and Shahabad (brevet of major, medal with three clasps). Nominated a C.B. May 24, 1873. He was awarded a good-service pension in December, 1880, which he relinquished on retiring from the service so recently as July last."

The record of war services, as taken from Hart, does but very insufficiently represent the many good and deserving qualities and qualifications of the deceased. His war services began and closed in his subaltern-hood, 1844-1858, and it may with truth be said of him that his early promise of distinction, had opportunity subsequently been permitted, would have been more than maintained, since he possessed in an eminent degree the many requisite soldierly qualifications which conduce to high distinction in the field, as well as social qualities, which in garrison or quarters commanded the respect, esteem, and affection of all, without an exception, who had the good fortune to have been associated with him at any time from cadet at Addiscombe to general officer in her Majesty's Army. "Sit terra levis!"

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS, Etc.

OMEGA.—Will the widows of officers who have commuted get pensions? For instance, a regimental captain who retires on substantive rank of major, after brevet lieutenant-colonel, then commutes his half-pay. Would the widow get a pension, she having been married while he was serving? Will you be so good as to give question and answer?—We think not, but Omega had better apply to the War Office.

OMEGA, No. 2.—We do not profess to answer such questions, but we may inform you the nominations for the Service to which you refer are made by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Foreign Office, Downing Street, and that the candidate must pass an examination after nomination.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—COLDS, COUGHS, SHORTNESS OF BREATH.—These maladies require early and unremitting attention, for if neglected they often end in asthma, bronchitis, or consumption. The Ointment well rubbed upon the chest and back, penetrating the skin, is absorbed and carried directly to the lungs, whence it expels all impurities. All the blood in the body is perpetually passing through the lungs, and there all noxious particles tending to disease can be quickly, thoroughly, and permanently neutralized, rendered harmless, or ejected from the system. Holloway's Ointment and Pills perfectly accomplish this purification; and through the blood thus cleansed, the influence of these wonderful medicaments reaches the remotest parts of the human body, and thus cures all diseased action, whether internal or external.

"Recommends itself not alone to those of limited means, but to the wealthy, who, when frequenting large gatherings, whether at racecourses, theatres, public meetings, or even on that sacred thoroughfare, the king's highway, have known what it is to be robbed of their valuables."

OROIDE GOLD WATCHES,
Accurate timekeepers, 21s to 50s, safe and free per post (registered).
The "SERVICE" KEYLESS WATCH,
Open face, jewelled in eight holes, Two Guineas, post free.

"The watches of this patent are in no respect different from gold ones. The degree of finish, of course, regulates the price, but the cheapest class is capable of performing with accuracy for from fifteen to twenty-five years. As to strength and solidity, the Oroide cases are undoubtedly superior to those of gold watches. No other form of amalgam can rival Mr. Rowe's in the general essentials of a substitute for gold."

"Thousands of persons who, though not wishing to impose on their friends by a display of what is but a semblance of the real metal, have not been indisposed to find an equally good-looking metal, which, reproduced in a watch, a chain, or article of jewellery, would not be a costly thing to buy, nor a dear thing to lose." OROIDE GOLD SCARF PINS, 2s 6d to 5s, post free.

THE BRITISH ARMY IN EGYPT.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Cairo, November 2, 1883.

It is notoriously dangerous to prophesy unless you are cocksure, and peculiarly so when your oracular utterances will only become public after their fulfilment or disproof. Some people might also add that to prophesy the probable utterances of the Prime Minister under any conceivable circumstances is the wildest form of prophetic rashness. In spite of all which, I venture to predict that on November 9 Mr. Gladstone will announce the immediate withdrawal of from two to three thousand British troops; that he will announce the approaching complete evacuation of Cairo; that he will refer to the complete evacuation of the country in terms as positive as they will be vague in regard to date; and if I may be yet more venturesome, and look farther ahead to November 9, 1884, I would add that on that day also the Prime Minister for the time being will still find the continued occupation of Egypt a subject for remark.*

There is no news from the Soudan. We hoped to learn ere this that Hicks Pasha had eaten up the Mahdi. Hic erat in votis. Instead of which we learn that insurgent Arabs are eating up Egyptian detachments.

During the week there have been two deaths, one from enteric fever at Cairo, and one from dysentery at Alexandria. There have been 119 fresh admittances to hospital:—Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, 19; Cameron Highlanders, 16; Gordon Highlanders, 12; Royal Highlanders, 12; Sussex Regiment, 11; Cavalry, 8; Royal West Kent Regiment, 8; Artillery, 8; Engineers, 8; sundries, 17; total, 119. The weather is all that can be desired.

The following have sailed:—Major Fraser, 3rd King's Royal Rifles, in command; Surgeon-Major Barnewell, A.M.D., in medical charge; 150 non-commissioned officers and men, besides 16 from Cyprus, three invalids and 17 prisoners; Lieutenant Powell, 1st Royal Sussex Regiment, to join depôt; Lieutenant Hon. Anson, R.H.A., invalided; Lieutenant Pressy, 1st West Kent Regiment, indulgence.

Leave of absence granted:—Captain A. J. Stevenson, Royal Highlanders, from November 18 to February 28, 1884; Captain A. Bathurst, Sussex Regiment, from November 4, pending retirement; Surgeon Dick, to proceed to Helouan, from October 29 to November 4, on medical certificate.

Surgeon-Major Catherwood, A.M.D., is posted to Abbassiyeh for duty.

The weekly state of the Army in Egypt, on November 2, was:—

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The most notable event of the week was the visit of his Highness the Landgrave of Hesse, who came down to the Camp on Wednesday, and made a brief inspection of the troops.

A course of four lectures on Artillery subjects will be delivered at the Prince Consort's Library, during the months of November and December. The two first lectures will be delivered by Major Bainbridge, R.A., as follows:—Monday, 19th inst., 5 p.m.—"Construction and Description of Guns;" Tuesday, 27th inst., 5 p.m.—"Ammunition used: different descriptions, their power and effect." It has been notified in Divisional Orders, that Sir Archibald Alison trusts that all officers not otherwise engaged will avail themselves of this opportunity of acquiring information.

The annual primitive mode of asserting Crown rights in the nineteenth century, by closing the whole of the private roads through the property of the War Department for twenty-four hours, except to officers and soldiers in uniform, was carried out on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

Two dramatic performances will be given at the Club by the Officers' Divisional Dramatic Society on the 29th and 30th inst., the plays selected being "In Honour Bound" and "Heads or Tails?"

The Pigeon-shooting Club was opened on Thursday in the grounds adjoining the Officers' Club. Clay birds were used. It is not the intention of the members of this Club to use live pigeons.

CYPRUS.

A correspondent in Cyprus writes as follows:—"The Island of Cyprus is in a truly miserable social state; a regular crusade is being organised against the soldier-officials. They had all the hard work to do at the commencement, and have had to bear all the brunt of the unjustifiable independence given to a people who have so lately been emancipated from slavery. With their usual gratitude, the Greeks have turned on their deliverers, and no words are too vile to be applied to those who rule them by the natives in the Greek press. Unfortunately, this animosity is apparently encouraged by the flood of lawyers who have lately deluged the island. Each district has been presented with one of the Colonial officers. That makes five, who are called 'district magistrates,' besides there is the Chief Justice, the Queen's Advocate, the Puisne Judge, and three or four private English advocates, without counting the swarms of undiplomated Greeks. All these men have done their utmost within the last six or eight months to create party spirit against the soldier-officials, who are designated 'military swells' or 'military despots,' according to the intelligence of the listener. The Chief Secretary, Colonel Warren, R.A., and the Chief Commander of Police, Colonel A. Gordon, are the officials against whom there is most antagonism. Party spirit has culminated since the suicide of Major Inglis, commander of Nicosia, of the 71st, last April. Some weeks ago, Captain Scott Stevenson quelled a riot at a fair, where a number of tipsy Greeks had done much damage. He was summoned as 'Captain Stevenson' by a man in the crowd for assault. The magistrate here (Mr. Templer) fined him £5, on the excuse that he was not on duty, but privately at the fair. The Governor refused to interfere in the magistrate's decision, saying it was delicate and difficult to do so, and at the same time acknowledging that Captain Stevenson only did his duty. Since then a number of the rioters have come to take out summonses, all of which are granted. Colonel Gordon has taken the matter on his shoulders, as head of the police; but that has not prevented the magistrate committing Captain Stevenson to appear at the assizes in bail for £500, though the complainants have not a single mark to show of having been hit. They were examined by microscopes, but the two doctors could find nothing. It is not only Captain Stevenson, but even the zaptiehs, who suffer. They are all Turks, as a rule, and the magistrates, to please the Governor, take the Greek side always, and every time a Greek brings a case against a Turkish zaptieh the case is given against the zaptieh. It is a foregone conclusion, invariably, and now the zaptiehs, who were so loyal and contented, have become sullen and irritated, and desert, or throw off their uniforms and say they won't serve. Colonel Gordon, Colonel Macdonald, of St. Martin's Abbey, Perth; Captain Young, 27th; Colonel Warren, R.A., and Captain Stevenson made certain charges against Captain Croker, lately in the police here. Major Inglis, Major the Hon. S. J. Chetwynd, and Colonel Warren refused to be stewards at the races if Captain Croker was secretary. The Governor protected Captain Croker. All the legal people took up Captain Croker's side, and Mr. Bovill was 'legal adviser' to Captain Croker during the inquiry. Captain Stevenson officially reported Mr. Bovill for acting as legal adviser to Captain Croker in a case that ought to have been tried before him. There is no public press here, no public opinion; it is all a small world of officials who are afraid of the Governor. All the gentlemen are leaving in disgust; the backstairs' gossip has alienated everyone, except a few toadies, and the whole island is in the most unhappy state. The Colonial Office must back up their Governor, and every one must show him all outward respect; but that ought not to prevent the truth being known and inquired into." Our correspondent winds up a letter which we have somewhat curtailed with the following account of a case which was exciting much interest in Cyprus:—"Captain Scott Stevenson, 42nd Highlanders, was summoned before the Kyrenia magistrate in Cyprus last week to pay £40 to a Greek, for taking away a stone sarcophagus. The magistrate at once granted the summons, and when a gentleman in court pointed out to him that the complaint was against the Government, and not Captain Stevenson, he replied, 'Hold your tongue, that is not your business.' Captain Stevenson has appealed to the High Commissioner for protection. Three years ago, when Captain Stevenson was in Asia Minor, his Assistant-Commissioner, Mr. A. Law, now magistrate of Famagusta, hearing that a Greek was excavating antiquities without permission, seized one sarcophagus of plain stone, and having no lid, also the broken pieces of another sarcophagus that had been found close by. These he brought up to the Commissioner's office, and they were placed in the Konak Square. Captain Stevenson knowing that the Turks of Famagusta had allowed the Commissioner there to take away a sarcophagus from their mosque to put over the grave of an English officer, decided to move one of these stones, which were only cumbering the yard, into the English cemetery of Kyrenia, where he had lately placed the remains of Serjeant McGaw, V.C. This serjeant, a brave and distinguished soldier, won his V.C. in Ashantee, and was decorated with the Queen's own hands, in the corridor at Osborne, for his bravery. He died of heat-apoplexy the day the British troops landed in Cyprus, and was buried near Larnaca. Captain Stevenson, hearing that the spot where he was buried was to be no longer enclosed, and that the Greeks meant to plough over it, went himself to Larnaca, and disinterred the remains of the serjeant, and brought them to Kyrenia. This was too good an occasion to be lost by the Greeks, and a native lawyer was despatched to see what could be done. The English magistrate immediately granted a summons against Captain Stevenson, though the owner of the stones, with some sense of shame, declared that as he knew Captain Stevenson had not taken away the stones from off his own ground, it was against the Government he wanted the summons. The value of the stone sarcophagus is actually only a few shillings. It is a recognised law that all antiquities belong to the Government, and the action of the English magistrate in this case, in granting the summons without first communicating with the Governor, is a subject of much comment. Captain Stevenson has professed himself willing to pay any sum sooner than any dispute with a grasping Greek should be raised over the honoured remains of his comrade." We print the above statement as we received it, "without prejudice," and regret to learn of the existence of a state of feeling, injurious to good government, mischievous to our reputation, and charged with danger to our interests in Cyprus.

A FRENCH "BATTLE OF DORKING."

L'Armée Française has been publishing a kind of French "Battle of Dorking," with the exception that the French triumph over their enemies and recover their lost provinces. The officer to whose pen this study is due has evidently given a description of what he thinks may occur—has written in a prophetic strain. He begins with The State of Europe in 188—, when we find Prince Bismarck with his "hands on" policy labouring to get hold of the Baltic Provinces and the Duchy of Warsaw. The chancellor has purchased the alliance of Austria, with a promise of Constantinople; and the alliance of Italy, in case France should stir, with the promise of the "two pet lambs," Savoy and Nice. England had made up her mind to remain neutral, but was friendly towards France and Russia. In April, there was a riot at Warsaw, where some Germans were massacred. Excessive demands having been refused, Germany at once declared war.

The Germans had two armies of four corps each, already concentrated in East Prussia, and ready to begin operations. The Russians had only one army, composed of five corps concentrated round Bialstock, but a second army, that of the North, was on the march from Minsk, and an army of reserve was being formed at St. Petersburg and Moscow. All these corps could not "enter into line" before the middle of May. The Russians had a third army destined to act against Austria, in conjunction with the Hungarians, who had revolted, and promised to furnish three army corps.

The German plan was to concentrate the two armies, and, without losing a day, to fall on the Russians, hoping to crush the first Russian army, to drive it back on Warsaw, and get between it and the Army of the North. In this way, they would be able to make use of the inner line of operations to beat the two armies in detail.

On April 13, the two German armies crossed the frontier, and on May 3 they attacked the Russians; a series of desperate engagements ensued, during which the Germans gained but little ground, while the Army of the North was hurrying up from Minsk to join their comrades. These battles somewhat resembled that of Eylau. On the 11th, the Germans made a last desperate but unsuccessful effort to carry the Russian positions; and in the evening, their light cavalry having reported the presence of the advanced guard of the Army of the North, the Germans began to operate a retreat. The Russians would now have assumed the offensive, but the Commander-in-Chief had orders to await the arrival of the Army of Reserve.

On the morning of the 21st, the Russians were prepared to move, and after a sanguinary battle, the Germans were repulsed. This defeat and other matters so changed the face of affairs that on June 16 the Germans demanded an armistice, which was granted. The Austrians had also been defeated, and obliged to ask for a suspension of hostilities. While these events were passing, France was concentrating cavalry divisions at Luneville and Nancy, which Germany considered as equivalent to a declaration of war.

The French mobilisation was terminated on May 2, and a few days later three armies were assembled on the frontier round Vesoul, Chaumont, and Bar le Duc. Two Armies of Reserve were in course of formation, and behind these were five moveable army corps composed of territorials, &c. A portion of this force with the 14th regular Army Corps was told off to watch Italy. The three first armies were composed of four army corps each, and were 150,000 strong. The armies of reserve were composed of three corps each. The plan of operations was to assume a vigorous offensive, and to pass between Metz and Strasburg. In the event of victory, Metz and Strasburg were to be blockaded as well as Thionville, and the Rhine to be crossed between Strasburg and Mayence. In case of defeat the French would be able to fall back behind their own line of fortresses, where they would be able to stop the enemy. The Germans were ready to take the field with three armies. As far as numbers were concerned, they were much inferior to the French, having been obliged to divide their forces. They had, however, in Lorraine, eight divisions of cavalry, and in case of success they meant to cross the Moselle, to mask Nancy, and to assume a vigorous offensive. On May 8, the French cavalry was attacked while marching upon Pont-à-Mousson by superior forces, and driven back, but two French divisions coming up from Nancy, the Germans in their turn were forced to retire. While the French cavalry held the enemy in check, the French armies began their offensive operations. The Moselle was crossed at several points, and the Germans, surprised by the French offensive, prepared to deliver a defensive battle.

Battle of Baronville.—Here a desperate battle took place, commencing at 6 a.m. At 4 p.m. nothing was decided, but an hour afterwards the Germans beat a retreat, which was not accomplished without heavy loss. Two days after the battle, the French armies of the Moselle and the Meuse, whose march had been preceded by most of the independent cavalry, by sappers on horseback, and by the battalions of foot chasseurs in carts, reach the Sarre, which was crossed on May 24.

The Germans had fallen back upon Kaiserslautern. May 25 was a day of repose, on the evening of which the cavalry made out the German position. On the 26th the operations commenced, the armies of the Meuse and Moselle marching in the direction of Vensel and Kaiserslautern, while the Army of Reserve advanced against the left of the enemy; the Army of the Vosges was to move north by Deux-Ponts and Homburg, and to follow the Army of the Moselle at the distance of half a day's march. The attack began on the 30th, when a sanguinary engagement took place. Night separated the two armies. The French, who during the struggle had commenced to entrench themselves, took advantage of the obscurity to strengthen their position and to renew their ammunition, a very difficult operation under the murderous fire of repeating rifles. The next morning the battle once more began to rage; but at noon the French carried the heights of the Lauter, and the Germans then retreated in disorder, the French cavalry making numerous prisoners.

After this the Rhine was crossed; the French opened negotiations with Bavaria, Wirtemburg, and Baden, who deserted Prussia. The Germans experienced a crowning disaster at Tauber on June 18, and on the next day the King of Prussia asked for an armistice, which was followed by a congress and the conclusion of peace.

Operations against the Italians.—The plan of campaign was to allow the Italians to concentrate on the French frontier, and then to disembark a force at Leghorn to threaten Upper Italy and Rome. A naval battle was necessary, aad this took place, to the great honour and glory of the French flag. The few Italian ships which escaped took refuge at Spezzia, where they were blockaded by the French fleet. On June 10 the Italians delivered battle in the vicinity of Lucia, and, after an honourable resistance, fell back upon Florence. Tuscany and the rest of the country would once more have fallen into the clutches of the French but for the armistice.

Treaty of Zurich.—Germany to restore Alsace and Lorraine to France. To cede Kœnigsberg and Eastern Prussia as far as the Pregel to Russia. Re-establishment of the German Confederation. Complete independence of Hungary.

Such is a brief sketch of the coming campaign which is supposed to be casting its shadow before, and the composition of which must have given the patriot writer infinite satisfaction. "O si sic omnes!"

OUR CRUISERS.—III.

We closed our last article with some remarks on the Arethusa type of cruisers. Since then we have again examined these ships. Two of them have been tried at their light draught, and unmasted. The engines of one of these ships has a stroke of only 3 ft. 3 in., and the connecting-rod is but 6 ft. 6 in. long. The Leander had a trial on the Clyde, before going round to Chatham. After 40 minutes of full speed the engineers were nearly driven out of the engine-room by priming, and the eccentrics had to come on shore. We may point out that this dog's-hind-leg system of working the slide-valves is quite obsolete. The last important vessel with a vertical engine, and this system of working the slides, was the Arizona, built in 1879. The slides in every modern high-speed steamer that we know of, are worked direct off the shaft. We think that these vessels will never be got to go at full speed in bad weather, as the steam pipes are too low, and are taken out of the fronts of the boilers. Nor, in our opinion, is their structural strength sufficient, as their scantlings are too light; and all experience is dead against such short stroke and connecting-rod. On the other hand, we were pleased to see, in the Times of October 22, 1883, that the Arethusa had made a satisfactory six hours' trial,—16·8 knots speed, 95 revolutions. Few particulars are given; but we apprehend that everything was in the ship's favour, and that she was flying light. We also note in the Times of September 5, the account of an unsatisfactory trial of the Leander. The same journal, however, adds that she is believed "to be capable of attaining a speed of 20 knots." We should like to know who believes this; certainly no one who knows one end of a ship from the other. Four vessels of this type are launched, three are fitting out, and one getting in her engines. In the most flattering estimate of our Naval strength, let us suppose three of them are available. In the next or (c) class, we have four vessels; all may be considered available, though there are, at the time of writing, considerable alterations going on in the Bacchante. We have already pointed out that the attempt to combine steam and sail in the one hull is a failure. At this time of the day, to think of protecting our commerce with sail, when the privateers will have 16 or 17 knots steam sea speed, can end in nothing but national disaster. Of the (d) Comus type, there are nine available and two building. The (e) Opal type are a rank bad lot; deficient in structural strength, badly designed in engines, bad all round. When we come to the subject of structural strength, we shall have a good deal to say as to them. In the meantime, we recommend our readers to turn up, in the file of the Times of April 7, 1877, the Tourmaline voyage to the Cape; of February 1 and March 14, 1876, and in that of February 20, 1877, the account of that remarkable vessel the Opal, her six unsuccessful trial-trips, her engines that would not work, her having to put back twice; in her second commission, see Times, April 30, 1883, the same thing over again! The Turquoise,—"this vessel has not been in commission yet, was only launched last year, but it has been found impossible to do anything with her engines,"—Times, February 20, 1877. When the Emerald was going into Sydney, on her first voyage, they could not get the screw down, as the ship had gone out of shape. In Mr. Campbell-Bannerman's Return, No. 307, of 1882, it is stated that four of them now require, on the average, £35,000 each to repair them, having only served one commission. These vessels, of 1,668 tons B.M., with no torpedoes, breech-loading gun gear, or any expensive fittings that we can discover, cost £115,000 each, or more money than a 4,000-ton P. and O. steamer. When money is fooled about in this way, is it wonderful that we have so few ships? There are five of these vessels; of their value to protect our commerce, we are unable to form any opinion, and leave it to the Constructive Department of the Admiralty to do so. As taxpayers, we have a very strong opinion about them, which may be best expressed in the words of the new "Pilgrim's Progress,"—"There is no relief except in profanity." The four vessels of the Satellite class we think good. Of the next class (f), wooden corvettes with compound engines, there are six, four of them in commission and available. These exhaust the list of ships with modern engines, and we now come to the vessels with old-fashioned engines:—Of (g) type, three, all wanting repair—Inconstant, Shah, Raleigh; of (h) type, two, both have had new boilers—Active, Volage, available. Of the remainder, (j) type, only three can be counted in commission. No account is taken of the eight or ten vessels mentioned in Parliamentary paper No. 305, of 1882, as not likely to go to sea again. As to the size of the ships, and where to draw the line, we do so at 1,000 tons B.M.; and we assume the vessels of the Satellite class, of 1,420 tons displacement, to fulfil this condition, and we have included them in the list. Taking, then, the Navy List of October 1, 1883, and the various Parliamentary papers, we think the strength of our cruisers may be stated as follows:—Total unarmoured vessels for cruisers—In commission, 22; in First Reserve, and apparently available, 14; not available, want new boilers, &c., 7; building, 3; vessels that are played out (though still on the Active List), 9,—or a grand total of 55 cruisers. As to numbers, we have for many years been going steadily backwards. Still keeping to the line of 1,000 tons, a reference to the Navy List shows that on January 1, 1865, we had 42, and, in addition, 6 of 950 to 1,000 tons; in January, 1870, 33 and 2; in January, 1875, 30 and 3; in January, 1880 (excluding the Valorous, paddle), 25; and in January, 1883, 25, which includes the Espiègle and Mutine. During this time, the tonnage of our merchant shipping has increased by about two million tons, and the ships to protect it have decreased one-half. The effect on the prospects and promotion of our Naval officers may be told by one of themselves, under the title "One of Them," Times, June 9, 1879. "There are 170 lieutenants on the Active List of 10 years' seniority and upwards, and daily the block increases." Since then the block has increased, and there are now 177 Lieutenants on the List. There are in our Navy half-a-dozen ships, which are unequalled in the world, to protect commerce, i.e., the Warrior and Minotaur class. Unfortunately, the Admiralty do not, or will not, see this, and a late Parliamentary paper states that one of them (the Black Prince) is not to be repaired for the service again. They would require new vertical compound engines, with a stroke of not less than 66 in., and connecting rods not less than 12 ft. long; their screw wells should be condemned, and their sterns built up solid; they should have four-bladed screws; their present rig condemned, and altered to steamboat rig. We see nothing to prevent their having a sea speed of 15 knots, under these altered conditions. The extreme value of these ships lies in the fact of their length, 380 ft. to 400 ft., without which no sea speed is possible, and the superior scantling, and, above all, the thickness of the shell plating. In the modern ships, such as the Iris, Arethusa, the shell-plating is only half an inch, which is utterly ridiculous. When will the public realise the weakness of our small country with its eight and a half million tons of merchant shipping? In an article, evidently written by a French Naval officer of rank in the Revue des Deux Mondes, September 15, 1883, p. 448, is the following: "Twenty cruisers of superior swiftness thrown on the commercial routes of the world would suffice, nevertheless, to strike her (England) to the heart. The commercial monopoly, which is the life of England, would be annihilated in a few months." As line-of-battle ships to fight with ships that carry armour and guns of treble the power, the Warrior class would have no chance; but their armour would protect them from any guns privateers are likely to carry, as the experience of the Shah v. Huascar, and Alexandria, abundantly prove. Reckless and unprofitable expenditure are the causes of the paucity of ships, and consequent stagnation in promotion, and compulsory long spells on half-pay. The taxpayer, though a long-suffering animal, may at last grow restive; and no Prime Minister in peace time is likely to ask more for the Navy than eleven millions yearly. Let us ask what possible justification is there in spending £245,000 on the Iris? She has an armament of 10 64-pounders, a small affair; she has, according to the report of one of the most capable officers in the Navy, who took her a trial trip to Finisterre and back, a speed and coal endurance of 16 knots for a week,—say, 750 tons of coal. She has almost no structural strength, and in bad weather would be nowhere. A mail steamer of 12,000 tons displacement, of 18 knots sea-speed, to carry 2,000 tons of coal, and 1,500 tons weight of cargo, or 2,000 tons measurement, could have been built for the same sum, and this ship would carry 400 first-class passengers, or 2,000 emigrants or troops. Of course, the immediate reply of the Whitehall official is that the Iris is double-bottomed, and has a vast number of fittings that the mail steamer has not, and that this runs up the price of the State ships. We may point out that the Servia is double-bottomed, is lighted with electricity throughout (whilst the Iris has only two torpedo lamps), has steam gear for the anchor, a refrigerator, and probably half-a-dozen steam winches besides; none of which are to be found in the Iris. Then, again, look at the bedding, linen, crockery, electro-plate, cooking gear, &c., required for 400 passengers, and passengers so "exigeants" as the Atlantic passengers have become, by dint of the great competition for them. The days when a first-class passenger made his dinner off some pea soup out of a pannikin and a lump of salt pork off a biscuit, are quite past. We have inspected every modern man-of-war of importance, and have no hesitation in saying that the fittings in the unarmoured vessels are not one-tenth of those in the largest class of Atlantic mail steamers. Again, compare the price of the Opal class—£115,000—with that of modern mail steamers. They are 1,668 tons B.M., carry 260 tons of coal, top speed on the measured mile 13 knots, or let us say 10 days at $9\frac{1}{2}$ knots; no torpedoes, and a light armament of 12 64-pounders. In the P. and O. accounts, the Kaiser-i-Hind was stated to have cost £114,292. She is 4,023 tons, can steam as fast at sea as the Opal on the measured mile, can carry 1,000 tons of coal, 2,000 tons weight of cargo, and 120 first-class passengers. The more we look into the Opal class, the more wonderful do they appear. We shall have something further to say on their structural strength, or rather, on their want of it. The yacht Osborne cost £116,500; her repairs from August, 1874, to March, 1880, £102,781; and the last Blue-book shows that it cost for her "annual refit" £7,170. The London and North-Western Railway's express steamer Rose—a vessel of similar size, but built of iron, and faster—cost £53,600; and the repairs for the whole fleet of more than a dozen vessels, including the proportion of general charges, for the year 1882, the published accounts show to be, in round numbers, £9,700. The training ships Eurydice and Atalanta are also worth a little study. As to the necessity of sea-going training-ships, there can, we think, be no question. To repair and fit out these two old ships we spent £62,846. Four new iron or composite vessels might have been purchased for the same sum, and in proof of this we may state that the China tea clipper Spendrift, one of the finest and fastest vessels ever built, much larger, and no less than seventy feet longer than either of the training-ships, cost £18,000. In the Atalanta Blue-book, it appears in evidence that two of the highest officers in the service, one a Lord of the Admiralty, and the other a Chief Constructor, who was also "finance officer" of the Controller's Department, approved of the estimates of £16,000 and £19,000 to repair the ship. The repairs—ex charges—came out to £27,000 odd. To spend more money on the repair of an old wooden ship than you can buy a new iron one for, of a similar kind, does seem so extraordinary in a maritime nation such as our own, that it would be hardly credited. Such, however, is the fact. The Enchantress, Admiralty yacht, by the Blue-book, No. 83, of 1881, is stated to have cost £49,685, and her repairs to March 31, 1883, £64,930. To this has to be added general charges of 10 per cent. for building, and $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent. for repairing; which would in round numbers bring the cost of building to £54,500, and repairs to £86,500. But this is not all. In 1877, it was proposed to give her a big overhaul, at the estimated cost of £21,000. A writer in the Times—February 15, 1877—pointed out the folly of spending this sum on a wooden vessel then fourteen years old, and stated that a new iron vessel of a similar kind might be had for £30,000. The Constructive Department of the Admiralty are a law to themselves, and so they repaired the Enchantress, and the bill came to £30,099, or with charges, £40,000 odd! The little training-brigs Nautilus and Pilot, of 501 tons displacement, and whose only armament is a few six-pounders, cost £21,250 and £21,500 respectively. These are wooden vessels, built quite recently at Pembroke. An iron vessel of 1,000 tons displacement, of the best description, much above the highest classification rules, with narrow plating, double-rivetted in the shell plating throughout, and steam gear to work the cargo and anchors, was built in 1881 for £7,800, including all charges. That this vessel is a good one may be inferred from the fact that she got on Port Natal bar on her first voyage, and remained there bumping on it for twelve hours. She was got off, had about eighty new keel rivets and the cement repaired, the cost of which, including docking in Calcutta, was about £160. A late writer on the Navy begins a chapter on Naval shipbuilding as follows:—"The chief fault of the Constructive Department is that they know nothing about ships." Between this estimate and the Department's estimate of themselves—viz., that they are the "model of the world"—there is obviously a wide distance. It is much to be wished that the public would pay more attention to these matters, so that Parliament might say authoritatively which estimate is nearest the truth. In our next article we propose to enter into the question of the structural strength of our ships.

An Autobiography. By Anthony Trollope. (William Blackwood and Sons.)

When these volumes were first announced for publication, there existed a considerable variety of opinion as to the probabilities of their proving a successful literary production. There were few who had not made themselves well acquainted with Anthony Trollope's works, and had not learned to look forward with eager anticipation to the announcement of a new publication written by him; but at the same time, there were others who thought that of late years Mr. Trollope had lost a great portion of his pristine vigour, and also that an autobiography would prove too difficult an undertaking. However, the question has been answered by the verdict of approval which has been passed by the public, and by the fact that it has made its way so steadily that a second edition has been asked for. Probably not the least attractive feature in Mr. Trollope's autobiography is the free, outspoken manner in which he tells the story of his "early struggles." There is a frankness in the manner in which the author of "Barchester Towers," "The Three Clerks," and other of his works makes confidants of his readers, and almost ruthlessly lifts the curtain which had hitherto concealed his youthful sufferings. On December 6, 1882, Mr. Anthony Trollope died, bequeathing to his son the right to deal as he thought best with the manuscript pages already completed, which formed a memoir of his life, provided always that nothing was to be done till after death. This memoir was begun in the latter part of 1876, and finished before the middle of April in that year. The editor, Mr. Henry Trollope, mentions in his preface a few incidents in his father's life that occurred after the completion of the autobiography, and which may prove interesting to many readers. It appears that his ruling passion was hunting, in which he indulged to an advanced period of his life. In the spring of 1877 he went to South Africa, and returned early in the following year with a book on the colony already written. In the summer of 1878 he was one of a party of ladies and gentlemen who made an expedition to Iceland in the Mastiff, one of Mr. John Burns's steamships. On his return, he wrote a short account of "How the Mastiff went to Iceland." Every day until his last illness Anthony Trollope continued his work. He would not otherwise have been happy. He demanded from himself less than he had done ten years previously, but his daily task was always done. At the time of his death he had written four-fifths of a Irish story, called "The Land-leaguers," shortly about to be published, and he left in manuscript a completed novel, called "An Old Man's Love," which will be published by Messrs. Blackwood in 1884. His last long journey was to Italy, but he went twice to Ireland in 1881. On November 3, 1882, he was seized with paralysis, and died after five weeks' illness. The first chapter of this interesting memoir presents a miserable record of the sufferings, both mental and physical, which marked the progress of the writer, till at length his literary power steadily became developed, and enabled him ere he had reached middle-life to claim a high place amongst the novelists of the day. The only assistance which he received while fighting the battle of life was an appointment in the Post Office of £90 a year. Nothing can be more touching than his description of home matters when he went to Bruges to see his people, while on his way to London to take his appointment in the Post Office. He thus writes:—

> "A sadder household never was held together. They were all dying, except my mother, who would sit up night after night nursing the dying ones, and writing novels the while, so that there might be a decent roof for them to die under. Had she failed to write the novels, I do not know where the roof would have been found. It is now more than forty years ago, and looking back over so long a space of time I can tell the story, though it be the story of my own father and mother, of my own brother and sister, almost as coldly as I have often done some secret of intended pathos in fiction."

Some very interesting pages are devoted to a description of the "Civil Service" as it then existed; the quasi-examination that intending clerks were supposed to undergo, and the rough-and-ready mode in which patronage was distributed by those in authority,—all this may be found detailed in "The Three Clerks." "Experiences of Post-Office Life" give many amusing reminiscences,—that of the tailor to whom the author owed £12, and the money-lender who assisted him to meet that liability by charging him £200 for an advance of £4! This considerate friend lived in a little street near Mecklenburgh Square, and became a daily visitor to Mr. Trollope's office, apparently for the sole purpose of whispering to him "Now, I wish you would be punctual." He was a little, clean old man, who always wore a high, starched, white cravat. Many readers of this portion of Mr. Trollope's life and experiences will no doubt say, and justly, that a Government income of £90 a year ought to have proved amply sufficient for all reasonable purposes, and prevented the necessity of forming "a most intimate, but heart-rending acquaintance" with the little, old gentleman of Mecklenburgh Square. In August, 1841, when Mr. Trollope was twenty-six years of age, he obtained an appointment in Ireland worth £400 a year, and this was the first good fortune of his life. The main part of his autobiography after this first gleam of good news contains most interesting details as to the circumstances surrounding his numerous works. His experiences of the publishers with whom he became connected seems to have been as exciting as those of his Civil Service life, and may serve to let the uninitiated get a peep into what goes on when an humble author offers his work for publication. In his course of dealing with these gentry, Mr. Trollope had hard cards to play, but fought his way without yielding a step unnecessarily. In the second volume, he introduces some "Chapters on Novels, and the Art of Writing Them," on "English Novelists of the Present Day," and on "Criticism." He thus describes the last:—

> "Literary criticism in the present day has become a profession, but it has ceased to be an art. Its object is no longer that of proving that certain literary work is good and other literary work is bad, in accordance with rules which the critic is able to define. English criticism at present rarely even pretends to go so far as this. It attempts, in the first place, to tell the public whether a book be, or be not, worth public attention; and, in the second place, so to describe the purport of the work as to enable those who have not time or inclination for reading it, to feel that by a short cut they can become acquainted with its contents. Both those objects, if fairly well carried out, are salutary. Real, substantial criticism must, from its nature, be costly, and that which the public wants should, at any rate, be cheap."

In this volume also is included "The Claverings," for which the author received the highest rate of pay that was ever accorded to him. It was the same length as "Framley Parsonage," and the price was £2,800. This was accepted, and the amount paid by the proprietor of the Cornhill Magazine in a single cheque. Among the small items mentioned by Mr. Trollope, as one which may interest some readers, is the fact that despite his early struggles and disappointments, he made by literature during the last twenty years something near £70,000. This result he regards "as comfortable, not splendid." The following are his parting words to the reader:—"Now I stretch out my hand, and from the further shore I bid adieu to all who have cared to read any among the many works that I have written."

"Phiz's" Funny Stories. A wonderful sixpennyworth! This and some others of Messrs. Routledge's cheap and nice publications put us in mind of the old apple-woman who ages ago sat at the gate of Trinity College, Dublin, and whose liberal ideas in the distribution of her "golden pippins" and "russets" procured her many customers. To one of them who expressed his wonder at the number of apples she sold for a penny, Molly exclaimed, "True for your honour! There's not one apple I sell I don't lose on, but praise be to the Lord, I sell a great many of them!"

Kate Greenaway's Calendars are very pretty and useful. We hope "Godfrey, Dorothy, Oliver, and Maud, children of Frederick Locker, Esq," to whom the volume of Little Ann, and other Poems, by Jane and Ann Taylor, illustrated by Kate Greenaway, is dedicated, can read small print, and are not too critical in their judgment, for the Poems are rather flabby and common-place, but are intelligible, and the illustrations are very fair and interesting.

"Phiz's" Baby Sweethearts are very like grown-up sweethearts. Perhaps Hablot Browne has given them more flesh and less clothes. Any way, with its other stories and its "Funny Alphabet," illustrated by "Phiz's" facile pencil, and printed in colours by Edmund Evans, the volume will be welcome wherever there are children of wit and humour or light and leading; and the same remark applies to "Phiz's" Merry Hours.

Messrs. Spottiswoode, of Great New Street, have sent us a batch of Christmas and New Year's Cards, taking 1884 very much by the forelock. Some of these cards are exceedingly elegant and beautiful, but we prefer the designs generally, to the poetry. There is ample verge and scope enough for the exercise of taste in purchasing, from the immense variety of cards, and the prices are simply wonderfully small.

The Forging of the Anchor. (Cassell and Co.)—One of the most beautiful lyrics in our language. Howbeit the idea may have been taken from the "Bell" of Schiller, it has found a fitting home in this exquisitely illustrated edition, and we congratulate Dr. Sir Samuel Ferguson that he should have lived to see such artists engaged in doing justice to his verse, which, if not immortal, is quite as good as any of the century.

We have only time to say a word of welcome to the first number of Grip, a journal for boys, with a number of articles and illustrations, including one of Mr. Welldon, the new master of Dulwich College.

The two 43-ton guns which arrived at Portsmouth in the Stanley from Woolwich on Sunday were lifted into the after turret of the Colossus on Thursday, thereby completing her heavy armament. The guns were each lifted from the parapet of the repairing basin, plumbed, and placed on their carriages in 13 minutes, the whole time occupied in the double operation, including the changing of the slings and purchases, being 40 minutes. The mechanism for actuating the breech-pieces has not yet been received. The six hours' full-power trial of her engines has been put off until January.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE MEMORIAL FUND.

It is with much pleasure we make room for the letter from Colonel Middleton and the memorandum drawn up by Sir R. Taylor, in the hope that the publication of them in our columns may promote the very excellent object set forth in them. The Inns of Court, have, we believe, panels to be filled by the coat-of-arms, names, &c., of the Recorder or other high officer for each year, but the proposed memorials will be of real historic value if the idea be well carried out, as we trust it will.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I have the honour, by direction of Gen. Sir R. C. H. Taylor, K.C.B., Governor of the Royal Military College, to enclose a copy of a memorandum which has been circulated among the several regiments, depôts, &c., in the service. As there are many officers who have left the Army, and others, who cannot by this means be made aware of the intended project, I am desired to ask your kind assistance in letting it be known through the medium of your widely-read columns.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

FRED. MIDDLETON, Colonel,
Commandant R.M.C.

Royal Military College, York Town, Farnboro' Station.

With the sanction of his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, and the concurrence of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for War, Gen. Sir Richard Taylor, K.C.B , Governor of the Royal Military College, proposes to have placed in the new church belonging to the College (which was finished in 1879) memorials of those officers who received their first military education at the College, and who have been killed in, or who have died from wounds received in, action during the campaigns from the Crimea inclusive to the present date. The form of memorial proposed in each case is to fill up certain panels (left by the architect in the walls of the church for this purpose) with ornamental marble and alabaster slabs, on which will be inscribed the names and regiments of the officers whose deaths and services are to be thus commemorated. The cost of each panel complete will be about fifty guineas. For this purpose and for future commemorations it is proposed to raise a fund to be called the "Royal Military College Memorial Fund," and if the friends of any deceased officer or others should desire to contribute to this fund, their subscriptions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Commandant, Royal Military College, in whose favour all cheques and post-office orders should be made out. Should the friends of any deceased officer desire to place a special memorial to him, the Governor will be glad to consider their wishes, as the church affords scope for a considerable amount of decoration. Post-office orders should be made payable at York Town to Col. F. Middleton, C.B.; and all communications addressed to the Commandant, Royal Military College, York Town, Farnboro' Station, Hants.

"A WASTED ARMY."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—Many letters have lately appeared in various newspapers under the heading of "A Wasted Life," which from their frequent repetition are becoming somewhat monotonous; and in now addressing you, I have, therefore, somewhat varied the heading under which I write. When travelling by train, I frequently meet numbers of discharged soldiers returning to what were once their homes, all of whom tell the same tale, viz., that they have left the service on account of the numerous changes which have recently been made being so distasteful to them; and that, although offered the option of continuing to serve for a pension, they have declined to do so. The country will soon be completely flooded with these bands of discontented men, and what is to become of them in the future it is impossible to imagine. The same thing is taking place with respect to officers, whether retired compulsorily or of their own accord, in consequence of recent changes. I much regret to see daily in the newspapers advertisements by retired officers seeking civil employment, one of which is subjoined:—

> A REGIMENTAL OFFICER, retiring, would be very thankful for a reasonably respectable SITUATION. Excellent testimonials as to character, aptitude for business, and punctuality; would not mind hard work; could give good security.—Address, "A. Z.," 6,106, 19 Wellington Street, Strand.

Such an advertisement was unknown in "the good old times," and would have been considered totally derogatory to the position of those who then held commissions in her Majesty's service. In the small country town in which I at present reside, to which I came several years ago, and which was then famous for its trout-fishing, retired officers were totally unknown. I can now count eight retired officers resident in the place, all gentlemen in the prime of life, with nothing to do but to amuse themselves as best they can; and the consequence has been that the fish have all been caught, the sport formerly afforded by its beautiful river completely ruined, and the game in the vicinity decimated. If a muster took place of all the discharged officers and soldiers at present in the country, there can be no doubt that they would form a remarkably fine body of men, many of them both able and willing to go anywhere and do anything. It is sad to reflect that such men should be leading lives of enforced idleness, and it is to be hoped that some organisation for the useful employment of those desiring it will be formed without delay.—I am, &c., ONE OF THEM.

It is notified that Lieut.-Gen. G. W. A. Higginson, C.B., commanding the Home District, proposes to place the maps for the war game and models for minor war game at the disposal of officers of auxiliary forces in the Home District on one afternoon in each fortnight, from 5 p.m. to 11 p.m., in the Levee-room, Horse Guards. The first game will take place on Thursday, Dec. 13.

THE SOUDAN STAFF.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I was amused at your article of Oct. 10, regarding General Hicks's Staff in the Soudan, the only objection to it being that it was written under a misconception of the facts of the case. The English officers were by no means forced on the Egyptian Government; on the contrary, Lord Dufferin was at first rather adverse to any Englishman going except Col. Stewart, who was sent to Khartoom to report on affairs in that country. The consequence was that only two German officers, Baron Seckendoff and Count Koff were at first sent. I had been promised a commission in the Soudan Army, but was told to wait, as no "English were required, for the present." Then, in January last, came the news of a crushing defeat sustained by the Egyptian troops, and also of the beleaguering of El Obeid. And Baker Pasha was now asked by the Egyptian War Office to find a retired English colonel, whom they would promote to the rank of General and appoint Chief of the Staff of the Army of the Soudan. The appointment went begging for some time. It was offered to Col. Mason, an ex-American officer, who had served under Gen. Stone Pasha in the Soudan and against the Abyssinians, but declined. Then to Col. Stevens, Egyptian Army, who also refused the honour. Subsequently, Col. Hicks, a retired officer from the Bombay Staff, was found to accept the position. To the Staff under "Colonel," now "General," Hicks were attached seven English officers, myself among the number. So much for the origin of the appointments which you imply were forced on the Egyptians. Really your informant must be wonderfully misinformed, when he tells you that the pay of "these officers is enormously greater than that of the British officers of similar rank," and that "as yet there has been nothing done to put down the rebellion." What can he have meant by that? I will simply relate the real facts. The army with which I marched from Kowa to Gebel-ain utterly crushed all opposition in the Sennaar, and after the battle of Marabea, when nine chiefs, two of whom were sent especially by the Mahdi, were killed, the greater part of the remaining Sheiks in that province came into our camp and surrendered. The success was so important that a well-known diplomatist wrote to Gen. Hicks that the "importance of the victory could not be over-estimated." He was right, for had the Arabs succeeded in breaking our square, as they have often done on former occasions when attacking the armies of the Khedive, they would have killed every one, marched on Khartoom, taking the various forts on the way, and it would have been a long time before a similar army could have been collected; besides, the loss of prestige would have been immense. How unwise it is, then, to rush into print with an ignorance of the subject of which one writes! But you are not alone. The Standard talked of us as being on the "Blue Nile"! We were never near it after leaving Khartoom. We were always on the bank of the White. The Times in February last actually talked of Khartoom being "threatened" by the "Mahdi," he being 200 miles off, and never having been near that town; and of Col. Stewart being "perhaps able to hold it against him," this officer in reality having been sent there for a purely diplomatic reason, having had nothing whatever to do when there with military affairs! At Khartoom, having suffered from chronic diarrhœa for a length of time—the result of having had little medicine, bad food, and Nile water mixed with filth of the camp to drink, during the campaign—the doctors declared that change of air was absolutely necessary to save my life, and recommended me six months' leave, according to the following form:—"We, the undersigned, after having carefully examined Lieut.-Col. the Hon. J. Colborne, are of opinion that it is absolutely necessary that he should leave the country. His illness (dysenteric diarrhœa) was contracted while on active service in the field, and was not occasioned by any fault or negligence of his own. We recommend that he should be granted six months' leave of absence.—(Signed), T. ROSENBERG, Surg.-Major, S.S.F.F.; Dr. GEORGEO BEY, Surgeon-in-Chief to the Soudan Government." "In conformity with the above, Colonel the Hon. J. Colborne is granted six months' leave, with full pay, and will proceed to Cairo.—(Signed), W. H. HICKS, Major-General, Chief of the Staff." In contradiction to the implied meaning of your letter, I wish to state "that I found the climate did not agree with me," that I went through the whole of the Sennaar campaign, from first to last, without going on the sick list a day; that I was sent on in advance to Kowa with troops, where I first contracted the disease, chronic diarrhœa, which afterwards caused my beng sent from the Soudan, not as a victim to the climate, which agreed with me, and which I enjoyed, but to the Nile water, mixed, as it was, with the indescribable filth of the camp, and which I had to drink. Further explanation is unnecessary, but any one conversant with the habits and customs of the Egyptian soldiers in camp will understand my meaning. Col. Martin was now sent on six months' leave, suffering from the same disease, and Capt. Forrest Walker from sunstroke. I was then left at this fort for three weeks, Capt. Massey being the only other English officer with me. Gen. Hicks was occupied in reconnoitring up the river, and in going back to Khartoom to insist upon provisions being sent to our fort, and for our coming campaign. With him, on board the steamer, were Cols. Farquhar, de Coëtlogon, Capt. Evans, and Surg. Rosenberg. The march from Kowa commenced on April 24. Col. de Coëtlogon, who had been sent to Khartoom, had returned with the Army. Capt. Massey went on board the steamer as acting aide-de-camp to the general. Where were the rest of the English officers? Col. de Coëtlogon, therefore, and myself were the only officers with the Army as it marched its long, severe march to Gebel-ain. Some days afterwards, Gen. Hicks and the other officers joined us, as we were encamped on the banks of the Nile, intelligence having been received that the enemy had left Gebel-ain to attack us. On April 30, the battle of Marabea took place, and two days afterwards we continued our march to Gebel-ain, whither it was supposed the defeated Basara Arabs had flown to make their last stand. De Coëtlogon and myself continued as before with the Army, the rest having again gone on board the steamer. After some days' marching in a blazing sun, the thermometer being over 116° in our tents, for we, the two English officers, now had tents, though prior to the battle we had not. On reaching Gebel-ain, we found the enemy had left; but Gen. Hicks had contrived to intercept and cut up a good number, just as they were crossing on rafts from Sennaar to Kordofan. The campaign was now over, and we shortly after returned to Khartoom, receiving the Khedive's thanks for the services rendered. Sennaar was again tranquil, and we saw, as we steamed down the river, that the banks of the Nile were no longer deserted. The water-wheels were again at work, men were tilling their fields, cattle were grazing on the banks, and shots were no longer fired at us. What a different aspect had the river when we ascended to Kowa! And these results, the pacification of a whole province, you call "nothing." I was there after the campaign was over a month; and three months before the commencement of the second campaign, compelled to take sick leave against my wish, as the doctors declared I was dying. By-the-bye, I may observe that every one of Gen. Hicks's Egyptian Staff officers except one were sent back to Khartoom or Egypt, invalids. The climate is not exactly the same as the shady side of Pall Mall or that of Wellington Street, Strand, as seems to be imagined. The difficulty was at first to get any English officers to go, and so far from the state of affairs not being "very creditable," the reverse is the case. When we started, we were looked upon as men venturing and risking our lives almost to the verge of insanity. Six Christians among two hostile armies, both Mussulmans. We were parted with at Cairo as men going on a forlorn-hope. "Te morituri salutant!" we were asked if these were farewell words we gave to the Khedive, who received us the day before. Others declared that if we were not killed by the Arabs, we should be shot by our own men, the Mussulman soldiers who were said to be smarting over their defeat at Tel-el-Kebir, and who were supposed to be sent to the Soudan as a punishment, almost of death. My reply, then, to your article is briefly this:—The English officers were not "forced" on the Egyptians, nor did I, "finding the country not agreeing with me, retire to live on my pay and allowances" at Cairo, the leave being forced on me on account of the doctor's certificate; and return was impossible, owing to the route between Souakim and Berber being closed to all by the Bishareen Arabs, about three days after I had passed through the desert between those places. The rest of your article is perfectly correct. I allude especially to Hicks's taking "certain or uncertain Germans," in preference to Englishmen as robust as they.—I am, &c.,

J. COLBORNE,
Lieutenant-Colonel Soudan Field Force.

PIGEON-SHOOTING AND GENERAL LAWRENSON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—I was very sorry to read your severe censure upon pigeon-shooting, in your paper of last Saturday, as I have always read it with much pleasure. Surely you are not a sportsman yourself, or you would well know that it is not more "debased" or "cruel" than grouse-driving, pheasant-shooting, coursing hares and rabbits (especially bagged ones), stag-hunting, fox-hunting, fishing, &c., and that it is only a Radical tirade to put an end to all sport. Every one knows that it is more difficult to hit a pigeon from a trap than it is to kill a grouse or partridge in the field, and few men can kill them at 30 yards' rise; and if cruelty is practised, the law, as it stands, can punish the offender. You should, too, have ascertained if what you said about the Prince of Wales is the truth, as I am informed, by the very highest authority, that neither the Prince nor Princess ever condemned it in any way, and not many years ago, the Prince went to shoot pigeons at Hurlingham, in the presence of the Princess, which I could show you in print. I should have thought, had you space, you would have alluded to poor Gen. Lawrenson being allowed to pass away without K.C.B. or C.B. after his name, as noticed in a letter of the Morning Post of the 6th inst. and the Court Journal of last Saturday, and how neglected old officers are who have distinguished themselves in old campaigns long ago, when younger ones, for late transient service, are covered with decorations.—I am, &c., TRUTH.

[We never heard of grouse-driving, pheasant-shooting, stag-hunting, fishing, &c., being associated, as pigeon-shooting certainly is, with high or low gambling. We have every reason, in spite of the highest authority, to believe the statement which "Truth" questions is correct. As to Gen. Lawrenson, whose name is so ingeniously associated with pigeon-shooting, we can only say that whilst he was alive, we urged his claims to the C.B.; but the thick-headed or timorous precedent worshippers at the Horse Guards would not hear of it. Heaven forbid we should ever call a pigeon-shooter a "sportsman," except in the sense in which the word is applied to the "gentlemen" of the ring and outsiders on the turf.—ED. A. & N. G.]

A general order notifies the award of 260 silver medals to as many non-commissioned officers and men of the Army "for long service and good conduct." The list, which is made up to the 1st inst., shows the following distribution:—Household Cavalry, 8; Royal Horse Artillery, 5; Cavalry of the Line, 17; Royal Artillery, 63; Royal Engineers, 19; and Infantry (including the Guards), 148. The general annual return of the Army shows that the number of men in possession of good-conduct medals on Jan. 1 of this year was 1,951, thus—serjeants and farriers, 996; corporals and bombardiers, 133; trumpeters, drummers, and privates, 822. The number of men at the same date in possession of good-conduct badges was 78,995.

The Reindeer, 4, gun-vessel, was launched at Devonport, on Nov. 14.

THE confusion of mind evinced in the leading articles of the daily and evening journals on the new phase of the Egyptian question would be amusing, if it were not likely to produce a muddle-headed view of the situation among the readers of the various organs who may constitute an influential mass of electors, and may be pro tanto rulers of the ancient land which is assuming portentous importance in our politics. M. de Lesseps has only himself to blame for much of what has happened. If he had not made the Canal, British trade, perhaps, would have dodged along the West Coast of Africa, rounded the Cape, and filed placidly off eastwards and northwards, for centuries to come. Now, there is opened for us in Egypt an Eastern question compared to which the old bugaboo on the Danube and the Bosphorus is a mere scooped-out turnip, with a farthing candle inside it. Let us go back a little, and consider how it has come to pass that the affairs of the Soudan have become of such consequence to us that we feel the overthrow of Hicks Pasha as an indirect blow at our prestige, though he was not in our service and only commanded Egyptians, and that we are already distracted in our councils as to the best course to take in consequence of the disaster. After the ill-advised and most calamitous expedition in 1807, when 6,000 British troops capitulated at Alexandria—an incident we do not much exult over—England took no active interest in Egypt for a quarter of a century, but the growing greatness of the Pashalic under Mehemet Ali from time to time attracted our attention. From the moment Mehemet Ali began his work, the relations of the Viceroy to the Porte furnished ample scope to contending diplomatists at Constantinople and the preponderance of British traffic with Egypt caused uneasiness to the all-powerful French colony which, by the goodwill of the Pasha and their own activity, had gained control of the intelligence and instruction of the country. To French initiative was due the first expedition of Mehemet Ali to the Soudan, and the extension of the frontiers of Egypt towards Abyssinia. The quarrel between Mehemet Ali and the Sultan in 1844 very nearly led to war between England and France. Seeing what has occurred since then, it may be doubted whether English statesmen were wise in their generation when they arrested the victorious march of Ibrahim Pasha on Constantinople, destroyed St. Jean d'Acre, and compelled the Viceroy to surrender the Turkish Fleet, which had gone over to him in Alexandria. Any way, the part we took then gave a decided check to the spread of English tendencies in the land the prosperity of which our trade had been developing. But we had made our power felt. If we became less popular, it gradually dawned on the Egyptians that we were rather strong, and they became anxious to cultivate our friendship and support against the tremendous pressure to which French ideas were exposing them. Before the Canal was admitted to be practical, Waghorn had organised an overland route. The mail and passenger traffic to India was sent on from Alexandria first by the Mahmoudieh Canal, then by rail to Cairo, and then over the Desert to Suez, as late as the time of the Indian Mutiny. British interests strengthened theirhold on Alexandria and Suez every year. The project for making a water-way from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea, however, was not only opposed as impracticable by this country, but objected to on the ground, understood rather than expressed, that, as a French scheme, it only meant a great wet ditch to stay the march of the Turks, when the Pasha of Egypt thought fit to declare his independence of the Porte. The necessities of our communications with India, nevertheless, ruled our relations with the country through which lay the shortest route to the East. We did little or nothing, however, to make our position good. But our Government gave an immense impetus to the works of the Suez Canal, by stimulating the ingenuity of the French engineers to produce the machinery for excavating the soil, which was rendered necessary by the withdrawal, at our instigation, of the hordes of peasants who were driven to the Isthmus from all parts of Egypt. For a long time, Kordofan, Sennaar, Dongola, &c., excited little attention in Europe, but the journalists who are howling over the Soudan Expedition as if it were some new-fangled enterprise, may be glad to know that, even in Said Pasha's time, Khartoum was the seat of an Egyptian Governor, and that the sway of the Khedive's predecessors was acknowledged to the junction of the White Nile with the Blue. There was a condition, however, tacitly understood. The slave-dealers were not to be molested. These regions were their happy hunting-grounds. The Nile was their highway. Said Pasha, indeed, issued proclamations at Khartoum, and made very fine ordinances, but there was no one to execute them, and the men-hunters continued their sport for years. The Egyptians had been led on from Wady Halfa to Dongola, and from Dongola to Khartoum, and had opened up the routes between Souakim Berber, and Khartoum; but they got little in return. It is estimated that they lost in various expeditions, not to count the Abyssinian wars, more than 30,000 men, and that they spent £3,000,000 sterling in their efforts to semi-civilise the Blacks and Arabs of Nubia and the Soudan. But being there once, they were in the position in which we are in India; they could not go back. Ismail Pasha was too clever and clear-sighted not to perceive that slave-dealing was quite inconsistent with the development of Southern Nubia and Dongola, and resolved to put the traite down. Among the most turbulent and powerful of the chiefs who exercised it was the King of Darfur; but a gallant merchant, Zubeer Pasha, made war on him, destroyed his army, took him prisoner, annexed his kingdom, and made it a present to Ismail, who summoned the Pasha to Cairo to "honour him," and never let him go back. The slave-dealers, however, did not abate their practices. and disorder prevailed. Ismail Pasha was therefore glad to act on a suggestion from the Prince of Wales, and to send Sir S. Baker, with an armed force and large powers, to put down the black-ivory merchants, and to establish settled government up to the Equatorial Lakes. Baker's vigorous measures diminished the numbers of the dealers in animated earth very largely, but did not, perhaps, increase the popularity of either the Khedive or the British. After Baker came Gordon, who continued the work of his predecessor, but did not vex Kabba Regga and other black iniquities whom Sir Samuel was bent on extirpating. Gordon did a good deal to settle the country, and settled some of the inhabitants, too; among others, the sons of the Pasha-conqueror of Darfur, whom he accused of slave-running. When "the Ever-Victorious One" left Egypt, the Soudan was handed over to Egyptian Pashas to govern, and although there was no great yield of revenue, and there had been some risings and revolts in various parts of it, the country did not give much trouble till the Mahdi sprang up, just before Arabi's time. At the period Arabi and his fellow-colonels made their pronunciamiento, the Soudan, equally with the rest of the great Pashalic, felt the want of Ismail's vigorous hand. The Mahdi appeared in 1881. Arabi could spare no troops to put him down, even if he wished it. The wretched policy of the Control, for which England was as much to blame as France, had prevented that energetic ruler from carrying out his schemes for the extension of railways to Khartoum, and for the conversion of the vast region into a great cotton and sugar field by means of an army with pioches et pelles. The iron will which would have crushed Arabi at once, and which inspired awe among the disaffected, was not inherited. Then Arabi was wiped out at Tel-el-Kebir, and gave place to the British diplomatist, who was to utilise the fruits of that crowning victory, and raise a crop of golden grain along the Valley of the Nile, for the benefit of Khedive and Fellah. The Egyptian Army was reconstituted, and a Police for Egypt formed; but the Foreign Office resolved in London that there was no place south of Philae,—it was Tom Tidler's Ground away towards the Equator. It was in vain the Khedive and his Ministers warned her Majesty's Government, when they resolved that the Soudan was out of the sphere of practical politics, that they would find the Soudan knocking at the door of the Council Chamber, whether they liked it or not, and that it must be heard. But Downing Street knew better. Bismillah! Could they not just shape Egypt on the map as they pleased, and warn the Mahdi not to touch it? The Khedive's Government were told that the British Army was only temporarily stationed in Egypt to watch over the birth and growth of law, order, and constitutional life, and that if it was considered necessary by them to protect their fellow-subjects on the White and Blue Nile, and to try to save the country for which they had paid so dearly from anarchy and slave-trading, they must do it on their own "hook." So they raised troops, such as they were, organised a force at great cost under ex-British officers, sent them against the Mahdi, and received a crushing blow of which no one can foresee the results. What is the Egyptian Government to do? Retire from the Soudan, say some great authorities. But the Nile flows from Khartoum to Cairo, and so to the sea. It cannot be barred to the enemy at some artificial line, nor can the Khedive command the victorious rebels before whom he has retired to halt there,—"So far shalt thou come, and no further." If the provinces conquered within the last fifty years were given up, not only would the slave-trade be revived on a scale of the grandest size, but Egypt would be exposed to the incursions of the fanatics, Berbers, Dongolese, Soudanees, and Bedaween, united, and the Canal as to which we are solicitous would be menaced by Arab hordes from the Desert, far more formidable than Arabi's Fellaheen soldiers.

SIR THOMAS BRASSEY, after quoting numerous opinions, in his work on the Navy asserts that, "The conclusions to which we are led from this concurrence of high authorities must be strongly in favour of great qualities of speed. The first-class fighting ship should be capable of steaming at least sixteen knots, the auxiliary rams seventeen knots, the attendant torpedo-vessels twenty knots." Measured by this standard, England cannot be said to possess a Navy worth the name. The Inflexible cannot maintain a speed of fourteen knots, and we have no first-class battle-ships which can do so for any length of time. Then, again, speaking of the French Navy, Sir Thomas says:—"The French claim for their ships superior speed, and much greater coal-carrying capacity than we have succeeded in obtaining. It is worthy of consideration how far these assumed advantages have been realised; for if they have been obtained without sacrificing more important considerations, then we ought not to allow our ships to continue inferior in these particulars to those produced by the French Constructors." A few pages further on we find Sir Thomas Brassey asserting that:—"While it is doubtless a wise policy to devote the resources at the disposal of the Navy mainly to first-class ships, a Fleet comprised exclusively of heavy ironclads can scarcely be considered perfect for the various duties and services the Navy may be called upon to perform. The shipbuilding policy of England should be conceived in a comprehensive spirit. It should include every Naval weapon and every type of ship which promises to be of service in time of war." Such were the opinions of Sir Thomas Brassey when out of office. Then he wrote:—"A very large expenditure has been incurred in providing an apparatus for launching torpedoes from first-class ironclads. The torpedo fittings are becoming a more and more important feature in the armament of an armoured ship. The value of this costly apparatus is not conclusively established. Our Naval resources would, perhaps, be applied to greater advantage in the construction of sea-going torpedo-boats in increased numbers." The truth of Sir Thomas Brassey's conclusions as to torpedo-launching apparatus has been conclusively proved by the failure of the Polyphemus:—Torpedo-boats, of the Lightning type, can be produced at a cost of £5,500 each; fifty, therefore, could be built for £275,000, or not more than one-third the cost of the Inflexible." Of the value of torpedo-boats in modern Naval warfare, there can be no doubt. They can paralyse the action of fleets. As Sir Thomas Brassey most justly remarks,—"As auxiliaries to the battle-ships, sea-going torpedo-vessels would be not less formidable than rams. In dark nights, in fog or hazy weather, and in the smoke and confusion of a Naval engagement, it would be difficult to resist the attack of a swarm of such puny antagonists. No less than 110 torpedo-boats have recently been built for the Russian Navy, and if our squadron lately stationed in Eastern waters had been engaged in active hostilities with Russia, it would have been attacked by these small but terrible opponents." When we remember the Parliamentary assurances of Lord Northbrook, Sir Thomas Brassey, and Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, "That the Navy was never more powerful than it is at this moment," and turn to the pages of Sir Thomas Brassey's work for proof that this statement is true, we fairly stand aghast. For years past we have striven to make it clearly understood that numbers and speed are essential to protect our Empire. But whenever we have raised our voice, the country has received an official assurance that the Navy was not deficient in ships, and that the ships were not deficient in speed. "As a last word on the subject," says Sir Thomas, "I venture to express an individual opinion that the protection of our commerce at sea should be the primary aim of our shipbuilding policy. Foreign officers and constructors are agreed that they cannot engage in the line-of-battle against England with the hope of success. They point to our commerce as the vulnerable spot, the heel of Achilles. These ideas are being carried out in practice. We see in foreign Navies a recent and rapid development of a formidable class of cruisers, lightly armed, but of great speed and coal-endurance. Vessels of this class are plainly intended not so much to fight an action, as to intercept and destroy the defenceless yet valuable ships of the mercantile marine of an enemy. We must be prepared to protect ourselves against the form of attack which we have most reason to apprehend, and the nature of which seems to be foreshadowed not obscurely in the shipbuilding operations of our maritime rivals." But what steps should we take to defend ourselves? We have pointed out that four vessels, costing the same as the Inflexible, each carrying but one gun, but built to ram, and steam sixteen knots at the very least, would be more than a match for an Inflexible, a Duilio, or an Admiral Baudin. Sir Thomas Brassey says:—"In seeking for some indications as to the direction which we should follow in our shipbuilding policy, our attention will be confined to France and Italy. It will be accepted as an axiom that, while we may be ourselves so impressed with the importance of the superiority of numbers as to be ready to surrender an extra knot of speed, in order to increase our strength numerically; and while we may be of opinion that an armament of many guns of powerful but not unwieldy calibre is likely to be more effective than an armament of monster guns, necessarily diminishing in number as the weight and calibre are increased; yet, on the other hand, we cannot allow any foreign Power to possess vessels which we cannot overhaul, or to carry guns to sea which may inflict a damaging blow, to which it is impossible for us to reply." But this is exactly what the Admiralty have allowed to happen. It is all very well for Sir Thomas Brassey to say in his work that "we must have ships as swift as the fastest, and guns at least equal to the most powerful which are to be found in the hands of any possible enemy." But why does he not say so in Parliament? Why is the country hoodwinked? Lord Northbrook in the Upper House, and Sir Thomas Brassey and Mr. Campbell-Bannerman in the Lower, vie with each other in assuring honourable Members, and through them the whole country, that the warnings of officers and others well versed in Naval matters are alarmist cries, uttered for party purposes. And yet what have these experts said? "We must have ships as swift as the fastest, and guns at least equal to the most powerful which are to be found in the hands of any possible enemy. The Italians are preparing to take to sea four 100-ton guns, in ships having a speed of sixteen knots. They have also furnished their Navy with an armament of four more guns of the same calibre, which will be carried to sea in two ships of a speed of fourteen knots. We must be even with them in speed and armament; but the same armament may be more formidable and effective if distributed in twice the number of ships, having an equal or superior speed. The latter plan would involve the construction of a much larger tonnage, and require, therefore, a heavier outlay in proportion to the armament. On the other hand, an advantage would be gained, in a gunnery point of view, in the greater distribution of artillery, and the more perfect concentration of fire. The increased facility for a concentrated attack on a part of the enemy's fleet would be an important tactical advantage. If the ram were resorted to, the strength of the fleet in that most deadly though unwieldy weapon would be doubled, and the ships would be more easily manœuvred." When Sir Thomas Brassey wrote these words, he was actually supporting the demand of those he has since denounced as alarmists. These are also the very arguments we have used for years past, as a reference to our previous articles on the subject will prove. Again, we repeat, using the words of Sir Thomas Brassey,—"We must have some means of attacking the fastest ships in any navy. The first-class ships must be supplemented, for active war-service by auxiliary vessels, each specially designed for the use of some one of the various weapons of naval warfare. We shall require rams and torpedo vessels as auxiliaries in fleet actions at sea, while coast-service vessels of the Monitor type are the most effective for the attack of fortresses." In 1878 Sir Thomas Brassey, in a speech in the House of Commons, complained that we might be betrayed, in relying on our latent resources, into a policy of procrastination. That was when a Conservative Government was in power. Since 1880 his party has been in office. Sir Thomas Brassey himself has obtained a seat at the Board of Admiralty. But as yet the country does not possess the means he has laid down as necessary for carrying on a Naval war of any magnitude. No attempt has been made to supply them.

The Admiralty have telegraphed orders to Sir William Hewett, to support Egyptian interests in the Red Sea, which means the protection of Souakim as far as ships can do it. The Squadron, under his command, will be reinforced by gunboats from the Mediterranean.

War between France and China is now regarded as certain in Paris. The French Admiral in Tonquin has been ordered to concentrate his forces. Chinese troops are being hurried to the frontier. The Marquis Tseng is reported to have sent an official notification to Lord Granville to the above effect.

The Admiralty have selected Vice-Admiral Sir William Dowell, at present in command of the Channel Squadron, to succeed Vice-Admiral G. O. Willes as Commander-in-Chief on the China Station. As the period of service of Admiral Willes expires on January 3, 1884, Sir William Dowell will at once haul down his flag on board the Minotaur, and proceed by mail to Hong Kong. Vice-Admiral H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh assumes the command of the Channel Squadron.

The appointment of Captain Sir John Hawley Glover, R.N., G.C.M.G., to a second term of office as Governor of Newfoundland, will give much satisfaction to a large circle of admirers and friends. His war services as a Naval officer, and as Commander of the expedition that marched from Lagos to Coomassie, during the Ashantee war, are too well known to need recapitulation. Since his former tenure of office in Newfoundland, Sir John has been Governor of the Leeward Islands, and his reappointment would seem to point to a new departure in our dealings with the French and French claims on the Newfoundland Coast.

The Admiralty have decided not to give any commissions in the Royal Marine Light Infantry to the candidates competing at the forthcoming examinations for admission to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst.

The appointment of Sir William Dowell, whose period of service in the Channel Squadron expires on April 17, 1884, to relieve Vice-Admiral Willes on the China Station, will bear very hardly on the unemployed Vice-Admirals, two of whom would, under ordinary circumstances, have been placed upon full pay next year, had this selection not been made. As matters now stand, but one Vice-Admiral will receive a command, owing to Sir William Dowell being continued on full pay.

We would suggest that as the four obsolete ironclads of the Channel Squadron, viz., the Minotaur, Agincourt, Northumberland, and Achilles, are likely to be superseded by more modern ships next April, their old armour might be replaced with advantage by new compound plates, when, with new machinery and new guns, they would do admirably for cruisers, to protect our commerce.

Though Sir Henry James stated that more ironclads were to be commenced, no signs of such are manifest. Perhaps the Attorney-General was speaking from his brief?

It is believed at Devonport that there is little chance of the Bellerophon proceeding to sea as a gunnery ship for another year, the authorities being unable to provide her with the new armament.

The Admiralty last week contradicted officially the statements of the French Press to the effect that Commander Johnstone, of the Dryad, was to be superseded; and they this week supersede Commander Johnstone by appointing Commander E. G. Hulton to the Dryad. This shows how much reliance can be placed in official contradictions. It is to be hoped that the Admiralty will now promote Commander Johnstone for the able manner in which he has safeguarded British interests in Madagascar.

Men who go about with the Bible in one hand and their purse in the other, and measure the virtues of their fellow creatures by these standards, are not exactly the sort of men to administer the affairs of the Navy. And yet, if report speaks true, it is by these standards the qualifications of officers for employment are determined by the chief of a certain department at the Admiralty. It is a very old saying, the truth of which no one will deny, that "Kissing goes by favour," and very agreeable too it is, at times, for those who are kissed; but there can be no excuse for carrying favouritism to the high pitch it has reached in the department to which we allude, the chief of which denies all knowledge of the existence of applications made privately, and of correspondence bearing his signature, on the ground that neither were official. We do see why the remark, "This is an officious person," should be entered against the name of an officer because that officer deemed it his duty to suggest reforms.

A report is current that the Admiralty are about to bestow the command of the Carysfort on Captain F. G. Bedford, R.N., Captain Domvile, it is said, preferring to wait for a home appointment.

No progress appears to be made towards a third dock at Malta. This supineness would seem surprising to those who are unaware how national safety is often sacrificed to economy.

At the recent trial at Buckau, near Magdeburg, the 50-ton gun completely shattered the chilled-iron turret plate, over three feet thick. Germany has adopted the system of spheroidal iron turrets, and several of these have been set up along the Bavarian and Russian frontiers. Italy also erected two forts on the same system at Spezzia. It was believed that the sides of these defences were proof against the heaviest ordnance, but the trial at Buckau has demonstrated the fallacy of the idea, as also the wisdom of the English authorities in declining to entertain the proposal of Mr. Gruson that the War Office should purchase a complete fort. The Inspector-General of Fortifications recommended some years ago that one of Mr. Gruson's plates should be tried, and the Admiralty also offered to purchase one plate for the same purpose, but Mr. Gruson positively declined to entertain the proposal, stating that he would supply a fort complete, or nothing.

Whenever officers of the Royal Marines, serving at head-quarters, apply for leave of absence, the date and period of the last leave is to be noted and attached to the application.

Lord John Hay has informed the Admiralty of the extension of shoal ground eastward of Culloden Reef, on the northern side of the entrance to Aboukir Bay. The Condor has ascertained that this shoal, within the five-fathom line, extends three and a half cables eastward of the reef, with depths of 21 to 28 feet over sand and rock. To the northward and eastward of the five-fathom line, for a distance of about two and a half cables, the depths are generally six to ten feet less than existed when the survey was made in 1857.

Sir William Dowell has issued the following programme of the movements of the Channel Squadron, but owing to the change of Admirals it may not be carried out, as most fervently hoped by all serving in the Squadron :—

Lieutenant and Commander Prickett, of the Jackal, has sent the description of a sunken rock, on which the Cygnet struck when in charge of a pilot, on the southern side of Loch Ailort, to the Admiralty. This rock is of irregular shape, extending about 20 yards in an E.S.E. and W.N.W. direction, and having two pinnacles 16 yards apart, with two feet of water upon them at low water spring tides, and 10 feet close around. The wreck of the Cygnet was still lying on the rock.

Captain Fairfax will relinquish the command of the Monarch in February next, when the ship will probably be brought home to pay off. It is reported that her relief will be the Neptune, now attached to the Channel Squadron.

It is understood that Major W. H. Vallack Tom, at present commanding the Marines, Royal Adelaide, flagship at Devonport, will shortly be retired from the service at his own request, under the Order in Council of February 22, 1870. Major Tom will complete his full time on January 19 next.

Our neighbours are keeping their Tonquin affairs as dark as possible. It appears that the management of the war, as it is now called, has been left to Admiral Courbet, who has 10,000 men under his orders, together with 30 ships-of-war. Of course, only little more than half this force is available for a forward movement, and the fate of the expedition will lie in the more or less capability of John Chinaman to use his new weapons. If the Celestials stand to their guns, the Frenchmen will certainly have a hard time of it.

The ironclad building at Pola, will be named the Kronprinz Rudolf; the Danish ironclad recently laid down at Copenhagen, Ivar Hvitfeldt; the Russian ironclad at Nicolajew, Katharina II.; those building at Sebastopol, the Tchesme and Sinope. The cruiser lately launched at Kiel, was christened the Adler.

To Major Green, of the Berkshire Regiment, has fallen a piece of luck such as has probably never occurred before to any officer since the institution of compulsory retirement. This officer was compulsorily retired as a Captain from the Berkshire Regiment on April 29, 1883. At that time he was senior Captain of his battalion, and he was duly qualified for promotion, and consequently his retirement must have been indeed galling. Being qualified, he was promoted Major on half-pay; and so remained, and probably might have remained until the time arrived for his compulsory retirement as a Major. But quite lately it occurred to the astute officials in Pall Mall to second Major St. Clair, of the Berkshire Regiment, and to give his seconding the date of January 1, 1883. This was accordingly done, and as on that date Major Green was senior Captain of the battalion and serving with it, the Gazette of the 16th inst. contains a notification cancelling his compulsory retirement of April 29, and another one promoting him Major in the Berkshire Regiment from January 1 last. Such luck is rare, indeed; but to similarly situated compulsory Majors we say, beware how you allow "eternal-springing Hope" to revel in your "human breasts" on the shadowy chance of the same good-fortune occurring to you!

Mr. Royle writes to the Times of the 20th inst. from Alexandria to correct a statement that Sir Evelyn Wood was in favour of the withdrawal or diminution of the British forces in Egypt, and declares that such is not the case. At all events, the Queen's troops do believe in not Sir E. Wood's anxiety to have them alongside of his own men; but the Duke, as usual, appreciating the situation, takes care that a remarkably safe officer, in the person of General Stephenson, remains in command, as long as we have a soldier in the country.

In a book bearing the title of "Surgical Experiences in the Zulu and Transvaal Wars, 1879 and 1881," Surgeon Blair Brown, Army Medical Department, has condensed a great amount of valuable information into a small compass. As regards the "revision of an almost revolutionary nature which the whole military fabric has undergone," he says, "Into those changes it is not now my purpose to enter. I shall keep solely to the surgery of the two wars." Towards the end of 1878, Mr. Brown went to Natal, in medical charge of the head-quarters of the 99th. On disembarking, he was ordered to join the main column under Lord Chelmsford; but continued heavy rain, and the consequent badness of the roads, retarded his march, and saved him from being involved in the disaster of Isandlwana. He was stopped at Helpmakaar, where, and later at Ladysmith, the men wounded at Rorke's Drift came under his care. During the advance to Ulundi, and in that battle, he had many opportunities of exercising his skill and adding to his experience. He returned to England in February, 1880; but his stay at home was very brief, for he accompanied the 6th Inniskilling Dragoons to Natal, and found ample employment at the base hospital at Newcastle, in treating great numbers of men wounded in our unfortunate encounters with the Boers. Of 71 cases recorded, two are so remarkable that we are tempted to give brief descriptions of them, divesting them, however, of those professional terms which would not be intelligible to most of our readers. A corporal of the 1st Dragoon Guards was shot through the left elbow, when charging the Boers at Laing's Neck. The bones of the fore-arm were broken to such an extent that when all the detached pieces had been removed the limb was shortened by more than three inches. Yet this man completely recovered the use of his arm, without much disfigurement, as shown by a drawing from a photograph in which he was taken in the act of holding a rifle at the "present." A man of the 58th was shot through the left shoulder at Laing's Neck. After four months' intense suffering, it was found necessary to remove not only the arm, but half the collar-bone and the larger part of the shoulder-blade. This man got well rapidly, and in March, 1882, was "a very powerful, muscular man." The illustrations, "by F. W. Brookman, A.H.C.," are admirably executed, and show an amount of artistic talent that should not be left unemployed. The treatment recorded was generally successful as well as skilful, yet without detracting unduly from its merits, we must notice that the wounds were inflicted on men of unbroken constitutions, serving in one of the finest climates in the world, and that such favourable results could not be expected in the South of India, or on the West Coast of Africa. Mr. Blair Brown's views and opinions on the treatment of wounds involving extensive destruction of bone, and on the use of antiseptics, are clearly and fairly stated. His book is written in a tone of calm confidence, without simulated diffidence or undue self-assertion, and its great value disarms criticism on verbal blemishes.

Half a century ago the Royal Commissioners invited attention to the fact that not only was Woolwich our only arsenal, but that it was commanded at short range by Shooter's Hill. The Commissioners recommended that a strong fortress should be constructed on Shooter's Hill. A second recommendation included the construction of an inland arsenal. The Royal Commissioners did not apparently anticipate the destruction of Woolwich Arsenal by an explosion. Much has been done during the last half-century to protect the great dockyards and harbours of the empire, Portsmouth, Plymouth, Pembroke, Dover, and Cork, and it does not seem desirable that Woolwich Arsenal should remain not only in its comparatively defenceless condition, but our only arsenal.

Some weeks ago, we drew attention to the existence of vacancies in the Lieutenant-Colonelcies of three Infantry regiments, and to the length of time which had elapsed since the creation of the vacancies. Since then, one of the vacancies has been filled; but in the 2nd Battalion, Seaforth Highlanders (78th Foot), and the 1st Battalion, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders (91st Foot), vacancies still exist. It is now eight months since the vacancy occurred in the 78th, and five months since the occurrence of that in the 91st. The reason of the delay in giving promotion is pretty evident. It will be seen, on comparing the services of the senior Majors in the regiments in question, that, under Article 30 I of the present Royal Warrant, the promotion could not be given in the battalion in which the vacancy occurred, as the officer who would thus be promoted has already received his "first" promotion "after June 30, 1881." Thus, the question which it is taking the authorities so many months to make up their minds about, is whether they are justified in superseding officers who, on entering the Army, joined a regiment in which they were led to expect that every vacancy would bring them nearer to the coveted position of commanding officer, simply because that regiment has now been reorganised into a battalion of a Territorial regiment. There was a rumour, some months ago, that a new Warrant was in contemplation to deal with this particular point, and it was said that the great hardships entailed in the working-out of Article 30 I had become so apparent, that it had been decided to grant promotion in separate battalions to all officers of the new double-battalion regiments who had entered those regiments before April 8, 1873, the date of the "linking order." This concession we gladly welcomed at the time, our only fear being lest the benefit should be marred by the introduction of any time-limit which would have the effect of removing a grievance from those fortunate enough to have been placed in a regiment where there might happen to be a run of promotion during the favoured years, while depriving others, equally entitled in every way to the same consideration, who might have the same, if not longer service, and yet who had not attained to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel before the fatal date, through no possible fault of their own. As nothing has yet been done either one way or the other, we may perhaps still hope for the appearance of the looked-for Warrant; but, meanwhile, two important posts remain unfilled, and the whole of the officers remain in a state of uncertainty and unrest. Surely, one would imagine that less than eight months would have sufficed to have thrashed out this subject to the remotest grain.

We understand that in cases where senior Captains are unqualified for promotion, and are also unable to make out a case for provisional promotion, and have, consequently, to be superseded on a vacancy occurring in the rank of Major, their juniors in the rank of Captain who may have real and legitimate grounds for claiming provisional promotion have frequently been refused promotion in the vacancy in their own regiment, on the ground that his Royal Highness the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief objects to superseding an officer who is unqualified for promotion by a junior officer who is also unqualified. There is much reason in this contention, and we should have had nothing to say on the subject, if the decision had been adhered to. But in the Gazette of the 13th inst., we observe that a majority is filled by the promotion of an officer very low down on the list of Captains of the regiment, who is himself unqualified for the higher rank, and who supersedes the senior Captain of his battalion, because that officer is not qualified, and not considered eligible for provisional promotion. We have previously remarked on the unsatisfactory method pursued in carrying out the regulations as to superseding officers who have not passed the necessary examinations for promotion; but while there appeared to be certain rules which were adhered to in carrying out such supersessions and promotions, all was, to a certain extent, well. Now, however, that the rules are apparently made, as implied by the case referred to, simply for the purpose of quoting them in cases where an officer has to be "choked off," it is time to protest emphatically against the existence of one law for one individual and a totally different law for another individual whose claims would appear, to an ordinary mind, to be exactly similar in every respect. Rather than such anomalies should continue, it would be better to abolish "provisional" promotion altogether.

A Captain in a distinguished regiment had just returned from leave, and was talking about some company matters with his colour-serjeant. Missing a name from the roll, he asked, "What has become of Serjeant —— ?" The colour-serjeant at once replied, "Serjeant —— has gone to hell, Sir!" The Captain's face showed his astonishment and anger at what seemed a most impertinent answer, so the colour-serjeant added, "Yes, Sir, he went to hell last week!" This astounding piece of news was soon explained away, for the colour-serjeant, of unfortunately misplaced aspirations, only meant that the other serjeant had been transferred to L Company. This occurred more when companies were designated by numbers, in most regiments, but not in all. Though education has made wonderful progress since, it might occur now.

The French are again mooting the question of levelling the enceinte round Paris, and filling up the ditch. During the siege they were of no use, but, on the contrary, sadly hampered the troops when a sortie was decided upon, as many valuable hours were occupied getting the troops through the gates. The Minister of War has given his consent to the destruction under certain conditions,—1st, that the new line of exterior forts must be finished at the expense of the city by the construction of eight redoubts; 2nd, the adoption of a new enceinte traced in front of the line of the old detached forts, where there are no natural obstacles like the Seine and the Marne. The price of the new enceinte, about 50 miles in circumference, but which would not be continuous, is set down at £4,000,000.

The President and Council of the Society of British Artists will open their annual winter exhibition on Monday next. The paintings in oil and water-colours exceed in excellence those of former years.

We learn that at the last meeting of the Royal Naval College Masonic Lodge (No. 1,593) Brother Pulsford was installed W.M. for the ensuing year, Capt. G. U. Noel, R.N., being presented with a Past Master's jewel. Brother Roe was again elected honorary secretary, and Brother Thomas Hall, retired commander, R.N., director of ceremonies. The lodge is in a very flourishing condition.

A History of the Knights of Malta. By General Whitworth Porter, R.E. (Longman and Co.)

We learn from the author's preface that a quarter of a century has passed away since the first edition of this work was published. During that period the English langue of the Order of St. John has grown from a very slender and unimportant community, to be the powerful body which it now is, embracing within its ranks members, not only of the aristocracy, but also of the Royal Family. This development is attributed by the author altogether to the energetic measures of public utility which the Order of St. John set on foot. Such works were not confined to "The St. John Ambulance Association, but included very many others, which have been, and which are now being, carried on in accordance with the principles which have governed the Order from its first foundation. The remarkably handsome volume now published may be regarded as a rewriting of the entire work, wherein is introduced all that has been discovered relating to the subject. One merit, by no means the least, is that in its preparation the author has carefully avoided loading his pages with references, a custom indulged in by many, but satisfactory to few. He does not claim for his work the character of scientific or critical history, but prefers that it should be regarded as a careful and impartial narrative of events which spread over a period of seven centuries, and that he himself may be regarded as one who has supplied a link between the histories of Europe and Asia, which will prove of interest to the general reader. The spirit of chivalry which prevailed throughout Europe during the Middle Ages had, among other results, the most important one, the foundation of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem. To trace clearly the history of that Order, the author briefly sketches the causes which led to the awakening of the chivalric sentiment. The gradual extension by the Romans of their Empire brought about a system of colonisation with which they habitually followed up the conquests of their Generals. Rome maintained her sway, not by a local militia, but by a standing army, and trusted for victory to the well-trained movements of an organised soldiery. The principle of centralisation permeated every act of their government. The conquered population, instead of being degraded into slavery, were raised to the dignity of Roman citizens, and the judicious liberality with which they were treated made them yield the more readily to the softening and enervating influences of peace and civilisation. Having briefly noticed the establishment of the feudal system, and pointed out how military service was the only road to advancement, the author proceeds to picture how there arose gradually in the East a state of things which aroused the martial ardour of the nations to a pitch of frenzy. The Byzantine Empire had continued to maintain its rule long after its Western sister had fallen beneath the attacks of the Northern barbarians. Instead of striving to make head against the constant encroachments of their neighbours, they only sought to conceal their weakness and cowardice behind the idle pomp of a gorgeous magnificence, the result being that the Power which at one time shared the empire of the world with its Roman sister, crumbled away by degrees, and became a mere phantom of its original greatness. The province of Judea, in which stands the holy city of Jerusalem, and the Holy Sepulchre, continued to be regarded by all Europe with interest and affection. This holy city had undergone many changes and vicissitudes of fortune, such as its capture by the Romans under Titus, the introduction of an idolatrous form of worship, and the persecution of the Jews. During the fourth century, however, Christian churches began to replace the temples of the heathens, and Jerusalem became the favoured object of the world's devotion:—

> "Religious curiosity prompted Christians from the earliest times to visit the regions sanctified by their faith. So that at length it became a recognised principle that a pilgrimage to the Holy City was the most efficacious act by which the penitent could hope to atone for his sins. Vast crowds flocked thither from every corner of Europe to utter a prayer over the tomb of their Saviour, and to gaze on that hallowed spot where He had breathed His last. The very dust of the land was considered sacred in their eyes, and the pious wanderer on his return hung his palm branch and pilgrim's staff over the altar of his parish church, where it remained, not only an emblem of his own devotion, but also an incentive to others to follow his example."

About this period, a man arose from the obscurity of the East, who was destined to cause a complete revolution, and become the founder at the same time of a new empire and a new religion. It was Mahomet, who, early in the seventh century, established himself as the prophet of a new faith, and in a wonderfully short period had brought the whole of Arabia under his dominion. After his death, his successors, under several titles, made many conquests, the most important of which, and one that caused the greatest dismay, being the conquest of the Holy Land and of the City of Jerusalem. Here the reader will find a most interesting account of the extraordinary changes which time had wrought when, after the lapse of four centuries, the sacred city was freed from the yoke of Islam, and reverted to her old faith. The particulars of no fewer than ten sieges are set forth with remarkable lucidity, and form an instructive record of what occurred from the year 1057 before Christ, when David made it the capital of the Jewish kingdom, down to A.D. 635, when the sacred city was once more wrested from the Saracens by the Army of the Crusaders. Then came the time when "the Hospital of St. John" was enabled to show what a self-denying and beneficent institution it was. One of the first steps taken by Godfrey de Bouillon after the capture of the city was to visit the Hospital of St. John, and satisfy himself on every particular. It would be an instructive, if not an edifying lesson, if the magnates of some of our large London hospitals were to study the simple narrative of what Godfrey witnessed, and the profound impression it left upon his mind. Among many other things that he found there were a devotion and a religious zeal which so animated the Brotherhood as to cause them to expend the funds of the institution on delicate and nutritious food best suited for the ill and dying, but at the same time to content themselves with the coarsest and most economical descriptions of food. Godfrey was so much struck with what he saw that he at once endowed the institution, and so forwarded its interest in every way that it grew in fame, and before long there was scarcely a province in which the Hospital of St. John did not stand possessed of manorial rights.

Familiar Wild Birds, by W. Swaysland (Cassell and Co.), is one of the prettiest books imaginable of its class, finely printed, with excellent illustrations and very pleasant letter-press descriptions of our feathered friends in these isles, their habits, customs, &c. It is just the book for the young naturalist, boy or girl, and its 40 coloured plates and many vignettes make it as attractive as it is useful.

Sunlight and Shade. (Cassell and Co.)—This handsome volume is described on the title-page as one of "Poems and Pictures of Life and Nature." We have not been able to form an opinion of the merits of the poems, as the book has only just been sent in, but a glance at the illustrations (by F. Barnard, Barraud, Clausen, Dodd, Dicksee, &c.) enables us at once to recommend the book as one of very great beauty, from an artistic point of view, very suitable for a present at this time of year, and, though we cannot say all the engravings are of uniform goodness, it seems to us that the average standard is very high.

Yule-Tide, the Christmas number of Letts's Illustrated Household Magazine, deserves the highest praise, and should have large public patronage, for the illustrations are most admirable, and the "Foster Mother," which is given away with the number, is well worthy of the honours of a handsome frame as a beautiful work of art full of tenderness and grace.

SOCIETY IN CYPRUS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "ARMY AND NAVY GAZETTE."

SIR,—With regard to the letter in your last issue, on the official social state in Cyprus, I admit that such a state of feeling is "indeed injurious to good government, mischievous to our reputation, and charged with danger to our interests in Cyprus." Many names have been brought before the public in connection herewith, of which two have become most prominent. It is not a question of this officer or that officer being in the right or wrong,—it is a question of administration. With tact and firmness in the hand that holds the reins, such a state of things should have been suppressed at once. The whole thing has originated in the foolish gossip and tittle-tattle of the female members of the small English society that has grown up at the principal town of the island, and the seat of Government. First one husband, then another, all prominent officials, were dragged into taking part in it, till nearly all the heads of departments were, more or less, partisans against their will. The Governor, feeling it a delicate and difficult matter to deal with, and presumably anxious to keep in with all parties, shifted the responsibility off his own shoulders, and sent home a voluminous and ridiculous correspondence that ought never to have gone farther than his waste-paper basket, to amuse the clerks at the Colonial Office, scarcely fit judges of what occurred or did not occur, under circumstances with which they were quite unacquainted. It resulted in two military officials, round whom the interests in the affair centred, being sent back to their regiments,—rather an injustice to both, instead of justice to one or the other. They are both excellent and energetic officers, and have each done right good service in Cyprus. However, the harm done to the working between the several departments and to the reputation of the administration remains. Within the first 12 or 18 months of our occupation of the island, it made huge strides of progress; but during the next four years it has not kept up the same pace, by any means. This has not been altogether the fault of the local administration, but with the powers at home, who prune it too closely. The new legal reforms seem to have brought about friction between the new barrister magistrates and the Executive. It seems a somewhat peculiar proceeding for a magistrate to make the Commissioner over his district find bail for £500 to appear on a summons for a petty assault, arising out of that officer trying to quell a riot and save property from destruction. It behoves the home authorities to look well to all these elements of discord. We have set ourselves lately to govern and control two Turkish provinces, so to speak, Cyprus and Egypt. If we are to keep Cyprus, let its administration be a credit to us. With a little firmness and decision, we should hear no more of dissensions among the officials.—I am, &c.,

SHIPBUILDING IN CHINA.

The Chinese Government commenced building five months ago at Shanghai and in its immediate neighbourhood sea floating batteries for the defence of the Yang-tse-Kiang, four of these batteries having been ordered from foreign builders who are established at Shanghai, while the two others are being built at Kiang-Nan, the arsenal of Shanghai, some three miles from the city. Two of these batteries were launched last month, and, like the four others, they have wooden hulls, with double decks, and have no masts or propellers. They are 135 ft. long, by 36 ft. in beam, and 5 ft. deep. Upon the upper deck is a wooden turret, armed with three 12-ton Armstrong guns. The hull is divided into five compartments for the provisions, sleeping-berths, and other supplies, the centre compartment carrying the powder and ammunition. The crew will consist of 105 men, of whom five will be officers, 50 seamen, and 50 marines. As these batteries have no propelling power, they will have to be towed or hauled to the point selected for the defence of the Yellow River. The arsenal of Kiang-Nan, at which these batteries have been built, has turned out several men-of-war recently, including a wooden frigate which has never taken the sea. The best vessel built there was a gunboat bearing the terrific title of The Terror of the Western Nations, but this vessel is so deep in the water that the upper deck only just clears the surface, so that she cannot leave the river. There are also at Kiang-Nan a cannon foundry, a torpedo factory, and a manufactory of rifles which is said to turn out 500 Remingtons each week. The principal cannon foundry is at Shanghai, and it is under the direction of an Englishman, formerly in the Woolwich Arsenal, and muzzle-loaders of the description made at Woolwich for the English Navy up to the adoption of the breech-loader are manufactured there. The Fou-tcheou Arsenal, said to be the best equipped in China, is busily engaged upon the arming of the cruiser launched from there a few months ago. This cruiser is of 1,600 tons burden and 2,000 horse-power, and it is to be armed with Krupp guns of heavy calibre, to carry several torpedoes, and to have a speed of 15 knots an hour.

A correspondent writes:—"In your paper of week before last, you have an editorial paragraph regarding unfair practices which took place at the examination for Militia subalterns at Aldershot. As I had a pupil who was only two places out with eight marks, might I ask if you still consider the information you received to be without a shadow of doubt? If true, of course, one of two things ought to be done, in fairness to other pupils,—either, the military authorities being to blame, extra commissions should be given, in number equal to successful candidates at Aldershot; or, the successful candidates having signed a false certificate about 'not having received any kind of assistance,' should be disqualified, and so many of the unsuccessful candidates be given commissions. As you say nothing more on the subject in your last issue, I can only hope, for the credit of those concerned, that you have been misled. At the same time, I feel sure you would not have inserted such a terrible accusation had you not full proof."

The Phaeton is nearly ready for delivery by Messrs. Napier and Sons, of Glasgow. When commissioned, she will be manned by 250 officers and men.

The Western Figaro of last week, in an article on the first matinée for the season which had been held at the Royal Marine Barracks, Stonehouse, a few days previous, says:—"It seems that to be an officer of the Royal Marine Light Infantry is nearly the secret of perpetual youth. Some of those present appeared to be the same exactly as they were twenty years ago, and the majors are as débonnaire as ever." If this is the case, officers must be congratulated on their juvenility, although it must, after all, be in appearance only, since the junior major has over 23 and the senior major at the Division more than 28 years' service.

The France states that the Niger, which left Bordeaux on Thursday, took out seven members of the new mission as a reinforcement to M. de Brazza. M. Dufourg, chief agent of the Ministry of Public Instruction, is head of the mission, and will be second in command to M. de Brazza. On Oct. 3 Dr. Ballay was with a steam launch on the Alima River, and 2nd Lieut. Mizon was going in the direction of Majumba, on the River Quiloa, for the purpose of discovering a land route between the Upper Congo and the coast.

The Mayfair Mansions Company has been formed to acquire freehold and leasehold property at the West End of London suitable for residential chambers. A site in the Northumberland Avenue has been secured, and a minimum interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum until the completion of the buildings will be guaranteed by the deposit of Consols in the names of two directors. The offices are at 110 Cannon Street.

THE BRITISH ARMY IN EGYPT.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

Cairo, November 10, 1883.

Mr. Gladstone's declaration that Cairo would be completely evacuated caused no surprise, but considerable regret, among all circles in Cairo. Here at least there is little fear of disturbance, and the dismay is purely social. Some hundreds of the pleasantest visitors to Cairo are withdrawn at the very beginning of a season, which it is feared will be rendered exceptionally dull by the absence through dread of cholera of the ordinary tourist. Even the four to five thousand Tommy Atkins will leave behind them many mourning Rachels, for the really excellent behaviour of the British soldier has made a wonderful impression. Personally, I can say that I have not seen four men the worse for liquor during their sojourn of a year in Cairo, and I find my experience is not exceptional.

To the intense relief of the æsthetic public of Egypt, the hideous gray serge uniform has been exchanged for the familiar red. As an invisible colour, it was a success for being of the same hue as Egyptian dirt, the soldier was barely visible in those native quarters which form the boast of the Board of Health. But then there is no object in rendering the British soldier invisible in Egypt.

The 35th (Royal Sussex) and the 79th (Camerons) leave the country, as also the 46th (Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry) from Alexandria. The 42nd (Black Watch), 60th (Rifles), and 75th (Gordons) go to Alexandria, where there is naturally much satisfaction and an increased sense of importance at receiving the Head-quarters. I cannot help thinking that it is a matter of regret that the Gordons, the most sickly regiment on the list, should have been selected to remain. That the ill-health of the regiment is not caused by any cause local to Cairo is shown by the fact that no sooner is a small detachment sent to Port Said, where both the 60th and the 42nd enjoyed perfect health, than their sick-list immediately mounts to nearly 10 per cent, Healthy as is the climate of Egypt, nothing is more certain than that it is extremely difficult to recover health here without a change when once it has been lost; and the continued ill-health of the Gordons is a proof that that change is needed. These three battalions, increased to 800 men, will make the total force of the Line to 2,400. There will probably remain about 250 artillery and another 250 for service corps, or a total force of about 3,000 men. Four generals will hardly be considered necessary for this force, and the next point of interest is as to who will remain in command, Generals Stephenson, Earle, Graham, and Dormer being at present on the spot. I should add that the wail which reaches me from Alexandria at the loss of the 46th Regiment is shrill and prolonged.

During the week there have been no deaths, and 116 fresh entries into hospital:—Gordons, 27; Camerons, 20; Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, 14; Royal Sussex Regiment, 13; Cavalry, 11; Engineers, 10; sundries, 21; total, 116.

Leave of absence is granted as follows:—Lieutenant and Adjutant J. E. Pierson, 1st Royal Sussex Regiment, from December 1, 1883, to January 15, 1884; Lieutenant and Adjutant O. G. Ievers, 1st Royal Sussex Regiment, from December 1, 1883, to December 30, 1883; Major E. J. Fraser, 3rd King's Royal Rifles, from October 31, 1883, to February 14, 1884; Lieutenant the Hon. G. A. Anson, G.B., R.H.A., from October 31, 1883, to January 31, 1884; Surgeon Dick, A.M.D., in extension, to January 10, 1884.

Surgeon-Major G. C. Gribbon, A.M.D., is struck off the strength of the command from November 1.

Lieutenant-Colonel Murray, D.A.A.G., returned from leave of absence on Nov. 8, and resumed his duties.

Conductor of Supplies Dixon has taken over the Commissariat duties at Port Said, relieving Captain Leonard, D.A.C.G., who joins Head quarters.

The s.s. Neera has sailed for Liverpool, having on board Surgeon T. H. Parke, A.M.D., in charge, two non-commissioned officers, and a private of the A.M.D., and 33 invalids.

NOTES FROM ALDERSHOT.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Crown Prince of Portugal visited the camp, and the Empress Eugénie, on Wednesday.

The accounts of the Army Rifle Meeting in July, just published, show that the subscriptions amounted £922, of which nearly £500 was expended in prizes. A balance remains of £312 12s. Five London Companies—the Merchant Taylors', Bowyers' Drapers', Grocers', and Haberdashers'—were subscribers to the amount of £73.

Principal Veterinary-Surgeon Fleming inspected the horses of the 3rd Hussars, previous to their departure for Hounslow. The stables will be disinfected and cleaned, before being occupied by the 7th Hussars, from Colchester.

The instruction in minor tactics, on the models, will commence January next.

The lecture by Major Bainbridge, on Monday last, on the "Construction and Description of Guns," was but thinly attended, the subject being pronounced "a dry one."

The arrival yesterday of the Royal Scots Fusiliers increases Major-General Feilding's Brigade to two battalions. Since the departure of the 87th, this brigade has consisted of 3rd Battalion, Rifle Brigade, and a few details.

The Rev. J. Corbett has been ordered to Aldershot. Lieutenant F. W. G. Tothill, R.A., has been ordered to Aldershot. Surgeon F. A. Harris, A.M.D., is held in readiness to embark for India next month.

London Amusements.

With this week closes a very successful season of the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden. On Thursday night another special concert was given, when Mr. Sims Reeves, Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, Mdme. Antoinette Sterling, Mr. Barrington Foote, and Signor Foli were among the vocalists. The season is announced to terminate this evening, with the benefit concert of the lessee, Mr. W. F. Thomas.

"Gillette de Narbonne," transferred from the French Opéra Comique to the Royalty Theatre in Soho, has hardly proved the success anticipated. The composer, M. Audran, has not in this production equalled his triumphs in "Olivette" and "La Mascotte," and thus the result is in some respects a disappointment. The plot is drawn from "Boccaccio," being found in the ninth novel of the third day of "The Decameron," and the story was long since turned to excellent dramatic account by Shakespeare, in the play of "All's Well that Ends Well." Mr. H. Savile Clarke has furnished the English adaptation, and Mr. Hamilton Clarke has composed some dance music in the second act which is very gracefully associated with the nimble movements of Miss Ada Wilson. Miss Kate Santley as Gillette, Miss K. Munroe as Rosita, and Mr. W. J. Hill as the eccentric tutor, Griffard, carried off the chief honours of the evening; while an excellent orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Mozart Wilson, and tasteful costumes associated with a competent chorus, may be mentioned among the attractive features of the new comic opera of "Gillette."

This evening will be produced Mr. A. W. Pinero's original comedy, entitled, "Lords and Commons," which has been for some time in rehearsal at the Haymarket Theatre. The new play is in four acts, and will include in the cast Mr. and Mrs. Bancroft, Mrs. Stirling, Mrs. Bernard Beere, Miss Calhoun, Mr. Alfred Bishop, Mr. C. Brookfield, Mr. Stewart Dawson, Mr. Elliott, Mr. Percy Vernon, Mr. Girardot, and Mr. Forbes Robertson. The scenic artists are Mr. Telbin and Mr. Walter Johnstone.

The last performance for the present of "The Silver King" will be given at the Princess's Theatre this (Saturday) afternoon, and the house will then remain closed till the following Thursday night, when the new drama of "Claudian" will be produced.

The new comedy, entitled "Deceivers Ever," written by Mr. Malcolm C. Salaman, will be produced at the Strand Theatre next Monday, but owing to previous arrangements the novelty can only be performed for five nights at this establishment.

The Olympic, considerably improved in its structural arrangements, will be opened, under new management, on Dec. 1, with Mr. Henry Pettitt's four-act drama of "The Spider's Web," originally produced at Glasgow early in the present year. In the company will be found Mrs. Chippendale, Miss Alma Murray, Miss Laura Linden, Mr. Anson, Mr. C. W. Somerset, and Mr. J. F. Young.

The New Alhambra, Leicester Square, is announced to be opened on Dec. 3, with the new comic opera by Messrs. Sims and Frederic Clay, entitled "The Golden Ring."

ROYAL ARTILLERY.

In an official report on the practice at the recent camps at Okehampton and Hay, it is stated that it was apparent that sufficient attention had not been given to gun-drill and to the preparation and service of ammunition. The practice of the batteries was generally too slow, and there was a great want of system in carrying it out. This would not have occurred had the service of ammunition, fuze-boring, and setting and accurate laying been properly attended to while the batteries were in quarters. It was found that very few men could lay a gun with exactness, and the reports of the batteries which carried out their annual practice elsewhere than at Okehampton and Hay show this fault to be general. It was also observed that some of the most elementary rules in gunnery were either forgotten or unknown. The Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has received this information with much concern, and directs officers commanding Royal Artillery districts to insist on such careful and continuous instruction and drill being carried out by all battery officers, whether in the field or in quarters, as will ensure the thorough acquaintance of the non-commissioned officers and gunners with all those points which are calculated to develop the effect of their guns to the fullest extent. Before a battery leaves its station for a practice camp, the commanding officer of the district will satisfy himself that the foregoing orders have been carried out, and will report on the instruction of the battery generally, and on the proficiency and knowledge of the officers and non-commissioned officers in the actual service of their guns. It was also remarked at some of the recent inspections by the Field-Marshal Commanding that officers commanding batteries and detached guns showed great want of judgment in the position taken up by them in coming into action, and the particular attention of officers is called to the field artillery exercises, especially as to the duty of the battery commanding officer in selecting a suitable site for his battery on coming into action.

"R. H. A." writes:—"A paragraph in your paper of Nov. 17 on the subject of appointment to the Royal Horse Artillery would lead most people to believe that the case mentioned is an exceptional one. I beg to point out that there are many 'in the same boat.' The fact is, that a new rule has been made by which men are ineligible for jackets after a certain number of years' service. New rules in the service always hit some one hard, and this is not an exception. But I venture to suggest that this rule is a good one, and is hailed with satisfaction by the majority of the regiment. Formerly, men used to take their jackets for a year at the end of their subaltern service to qualify for R.H.A. in the next rank. There existed, not many years ago, an unwritten law (and one accepted and respected by the old generation of Horse Artillerymen) that, unless an officer had served in the R.H.A. as a subaltern, he was not eligible for the jacket, as a captain; and so on, in the senior ranks. This, like many more good old customs and traditions, has been done away with. It was abused by a certain class of schemers who made the Horse Artillery a convenience, and it is these schemers that the new rule will defeat. It does not pay many men to serve in the Horse Artillery as subalterns and captains, but it does pay them in the senior ranks. And thus we have had men for the last few years, who have never spent a farthing on chargers or gold lace, apply for their jackets and extra pay, because, forsooth, they have marched with a heavy battery in Afghanistan, or had a few days' discomfort and swallowed a little Egyptian sand. What we want is, that men should make the Royal Horse Artillery a profession, and not a convenience. The longer they are in it in each rank, the better for them and the better for the service. The new rule will ensure this, and we confidently hope that 'the good old custom, or unwritten law,' may be carried out too. Selection must now be employed to a certain degree, for a man will not have 'service' or 'foreign service' to back up his interest at head-quarters. This will be a step in the right direction also. A man is not necessarily likely to make a Horse Artilleryman because he has been through a month's course of equitation at Woolwich, because he is nearly related to an Earl, or because (I tremble as I write it) he wears a medal and a star. The latter has been the infallible recommendation for the last year. For results and specimens, see mounted parades at Woolwich, Aldershot, the Curragh, or Dublin. In conclusion, let us have good sportsmen and young ones; let them serve a good half of their service in each rank as Horse Artillerymen, and this new rule, which in its infancy certainly is hard on many men, will be willingly accepted by the regiment in general, and more especially by old Horse Artillerymen."

23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers. The 2nd Batn. embarked at Pembroke Docks on Tuesday, en route to Templemore. The Pioneer remarks on the fact that there are two lieutenant-colonels commanding battalions in the British service, one of whom is in India, between whose date of birth there should be 13 years with 16 years intervening between the dates of their entering the service—one having been a child of four in petticoats when the other donned the uniform of H.M.'s service. Such, however, is a fact. Lieut.-Col. (Brevet Col.) Elgee, now commanding the 1st Batn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, was born in Jan. 1829, and entered the service in April, 1846, obtaining command of a battalion 34 years afterwards. Lieut.-Col. R. N. Gream, who commands the old 62nd, now the 1st Batn. Wiltshire Regt., entered this world in Sept. 1842, and joined the service in April, 1862, obtaining command of a battalion 19 years afterwards. The above may be, and no doubt is, exceptional, but the intention of the present reformers is frustrated by such being the case. Col. Elgee being a full colonel of 1877, it was expected he would have obtained a brigade command in this country, which, no doubt, he would have done had not the patronage of these berths been taken out of the hands of the authorities in India and transferred to the Horse Guards for the especial benefit of officers who have been employed on the Staff thereof. The two last colonels appointed brigadiers in India—Cols. East and Elles—both entered the service eight years after Col. Elgee, that is, in 1854, and both were born eight years later, whilst the former is a colonel of 1879, and the latter of only 1881. Col. Elgee will stop promotion in the Royal Welsh till 1885 (April), when he, of course, will be compelled to go on half-pay on completion of his five years in command. When this takes place, the two junior lieutenant-colonels will have 30 and 31 years' service to their credit, respectively, and each will have reached the mature age of 49 years. The senior major will also have 30 years' service, and be over 47 years of age.

31st East Surrey Regiment. Lieut. A. H. Thomas is held in readiness to embark for India to join the 70th Regiment at Dinapore.

39th Dorsetshire Regiment. The old colours, which have been presented to the vicar and churchwardens of Sherborne for the purpose of being preserved in the abbey, as the chief church in the county from which the regiment derives its territorial title, were received on the 16th inst., and placed in the grand old building with fitting ceremony. The colours were presented to the battalion at Sydney in 1831, by Gen. Darling, Governor of New South Wales, and from that date until 1843 they headed the regiment. The colours were escorted from Aldershot to Farnborough station by the whole of the regiment, and as the colours entered the station in charge of the small escort which was to convey them to Sherborne, the National Anthem was played. The regiment was then drawn up on the platform and presented arms, the band playing "Old Lang Syne" as the train containing the colours left the station. The escort in charge of the colours consisted of Capt. and Adjt. Fenwick, Lieuts. Greenway and Jenkins, and Colour-Serjts. Plane, Cox, Mullens, and Hall. The escort named arrived at Sherborne station by the 12.13 train, and were met by a considerable crowd of the townspeople and the local Volunteer corps, with their band. In the churchyard the King's School boys kept the ground, lining the path to the west door, where the escort was met by the clergy (Revs. W. H. Lyon, H. Roe, and E. Langley), churchwardens, and choir, who preceded the colours up the nave. On the clergy arriving at the communion-table, the escort formed outside the rails, and the vicar received the colours, and laid them on the table, the guard, who remained in the nave, saluting. Capt. Fenwick, addressing the vicar, said:—"Mr. Lyon,—I beg that you will permit me to present to you, in the name of Col. Dixon, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of her Majesty's regiment, the 1st Dorset Battalion of Foot, with the colours borne by the regiment in peace and in war between the years 1831 and 1843. I beg your acceptance of the same, and that you will be pleased to preserve them hereafter carefully as sacred relics in this abbey, that they may serve to remind the men of Dorset of the honours won by English soldiers and by the regiment which has been now so long associated with the county. Tattered and torn they are, but they are the emblems which the soldiers of the 39th Regt. honoured in battle. I have further to express to you, on behalf of all the members of the regiment, the gratification with which they view the safe custody and preservation in your charge of their sacred banners in the noble Abbey of Sherborne, in the county of Dorset, from which the regiment now obtains so many and such excellent soldiers." Prayer was then offered by the vicar. The vicar then delivered an address from the pulpit.
